Architectural Survey File

This is the architectural survey file for this MIHP record. The survey file is organized reverse-chronological (that is, with the latest material on top). It contains all MIHP inventory forms, National Register nomination forms, determinations of eligibility (DOE) forms, and accompanying documentation such as photographs and maps.

Users should be aware that additional undigitized material about this property may be found in on-site architectural reports, copies of HABS/HAER or other documentation, drawings, and the “vertical files” at the MHT Library in Crownsville. The vertical files may include newspaper clippings, field notes, draft versions of forms and architectural reports, photographs, maps, and drawings. Researchers who need a thorough understanding of this property should plan to visit the MHT Library as part of their research project; look at the MHT web site (mht.maryland.gov) for details about how to make an appointment.

All material is property of the Maryland Historical Trust.

Friendship Farm is a modest three-part dwelling with a telescoping plan that was constructed during the second quarter of the 19th century. The dwelling is surrounded by open fields and woodlands and is situated on a 132-acre farm. The main block is two stories in height and three bays wide with a single-pile, side-passage plan. Although extensively altered, the center block and kitchen wing may predate the main block, forming the original building.

The dwelling at Friendship Farm is a significant example of the types of modest homes constructed in Charles County during the middle of the 19th century. This relatively small and unadorned dwelling, likely the abode of an overseer or farm manager and his family, has the typical telescoping facade of its larger and more formal counterparts.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Friendship Farm is a modest three part dwelling with a telescoping plan that was likely constructed during the second quarter of the 19th century. The dwelling faces northeast and is surrounded by open fields and woodlands comprising a 132 acre tract. The main block has a two story side passage, single pile plan with two telescoping one room extensions off the east elevation. Although extensively altered, the center block and kitchen may predate the main block, forming the original building.

The exterior of Friendship Farm was surveyed in 1978 by J. Richard Rivoire. The dwelling rests on a concrete block foundation and the wood frame is covered with weatherboard siding throughout with the exception of a twentieth century rear addition now covered in German siding. The tin roof is currently covered with a layer of tar. The cornice is boxed and the dwelling is heated by two chimneys laid in American bond. On the west end of the main block is a narrow stepped exterior brick chimney. The center block east wall reveals a larger chimney stack. The entire foundation has been reinforced and replaced during the mid-twentieth century with concrete blocks.

The main block is two bays wide with large, original 6/6 light wood sash double hung windows throughout. The original door has been replaced. A pedimented Victorian/gothic porch with dentils now covers the entranceway which opens onto a side-passage plan. The center section and kitchen wing descend in steps from the main block. Both are one bay wide and a single room deep. All windows are of 6/6 light double-hung wood sash composition with beaded wood surrounds.

The west elevation includes the narrow stepped chimney flanked by two square attic story windows.

The rear elevation is dominated by a shed addition that stretches the entire length of building, most of which appears to be of twentieth century origin. The center block includes a single second story 6/6 light window, while the kitchen wing is without second story fenestration.

The east elevation includes two original windows in the kitchen block, one on each floor and of the same composition as those on the façade. Under the shed roof is an exterior door and a 6/6 light window.

INTERIOR

The plan of the main block is essentially a side passage plan. Much of the early or original plaster throughout is intact and all floors and woodwork appear to be largely intact and original. The primary entranceway opens onto a narrow hall with the parlor to the right. What is now the rear doorway, opposite the entrance, is a four panel door that retains its 19th century hardware. The door includes a two-light transom above and simple beaded molding. The hall includes wood paneling, stripped of its earlier finishes in the twentieth century and a relatively modest newel. Unusually, the stair now faces south, while the primary entrance is on the north. This and further evidence make it likely that the buildings orientation may have changed over the history of the structure.

The parlor to the west of the hall in the main block contains a modest mantle almost identical to that found in the c. 1860 Simms/Burch House (CH-626). Both have a stylized oak leaf ornamentation. The fireplace of the first floor appears to have been reworked. The door to the parlor has four panels and its original hardware. A second door to the rear of the room also has four panels and includes a 2-light transom. This door currently provides access to a mid 20th century kitchenette. The room above includes a similar less ornate mantle of small proportions. Also floors, baseboards, doors and surrounds are the same as those found below. The floor consists of wide wood boards with wide beaded baseboards. Walls and ceiling are of plaster.

What is most unusual is configuration of the second floor landing which covers the transom windows of the current main entrance door. On the exterior, the transom has been partially covered with weatherboards. Also the door off the landing that accesses the center block is partially over the descending staircase. This may be evidence that the current stairway post-dates the original construction of the main block and that an earlier stair continued to provide access to the second floor until the new stair was constructed.

The center block probably predates the main block but substantial alterations complicate its dating. Vinyl currently covers the floor and drywall has been screwed to the ceiling to prevent the plaster from collapsing. Twentieth century French doors open onto a room under the shed addition. The first and second floor mantles as well as the mantle found in the first floor kitchen wing are all similar consisting of a simple two part composition. Four panel doors are also present. Upstairs window surrounds are square edged. Although it was not observed, according to the occupant, there is a break in the floor in the center block second floor near the middle of the west wall, close to the current stairs which may be evidence of an earlier stair.

The kitchen wing includes a board and batten door with box lock and a beaded wood surround. A door to the shed addition is 4-panelled with beaded surrounds.

The dwelling at Friendship Farm is a significant example of the types of modest homes constructed in Charles County during the middle of the 19th century. This relatively small and unadorned dwelling, likely the abode of an overseer or farm manager and his family, has the typical three part telescoping plan of its larger and more formal counterparts.

Originally part of "Friendship", a large tract purchased by Thomas Dent from Captain Guither before 1676, during the 18th century a small dwelling CH-8, barn CH-9 and grist mill stood nearby. The early history of the Friendship tract has been well researched by J. Richard Rivoire(1993). The Dent family retained ownership of the property until the 1816 when the property, encompassing 1,052 acres, was sold to Joseph Gray, Sr. and John Franklin Gray.

Before the Gray's acquisition there were several buildings on the farm including the Friendship House CH-8, believed to have been occupied by William Dent; the Dent family principal residence, occupied superintendent George Hudson; and a third house occupied by Charles Adams. (1798 Federal Direct Tax for Charles County).

After the Gray's purchase, the property was divided in two. Joseph assumed possession of the northern half which continued to be known as Friendship and John acquired the lower portion which he renamed Chinquapin. Joseph Gray owned a number of tracts in the neighborhood and resided at Mansion Hall CH-20(site) about one mile northwest of Durham Church. He died in 1820 and his property was divided equally between his sons Robert F. and Joseph, Jr. Robert received 227 acres on the north side of the road (Lot 5)while Joseph received 254 acres on the south side (Lot 6). The property descended through the Gray family until 1925 when George William Gray sold to Arthur Karlsson 288 acres of the Friendship tract.

A frame, three-part farmhouse, Friendship Farm is of very basic Federal styling and represents an average house constructed by small landowners and tradespeople of the early and mid-nineteenth century. Its two bay main block contains an end stair hall and a single adjacent room on both floor levels. Among its more interesting features is a small porch fronting the main entrance, the architecture of which can best be described as a localized interpretation of a Victorian-Gothic design, one of very such examples in the county.

Friendship Farm is part of "Friendship," a large tract of land purchased by Thomas Dent, prominent early colonial figure, from "Captain Guither" before 1676. DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Friendship Farm is a two story, three part frame farmhouse situated on the south side of Friendship Landing Road about one half mile from its junction with Md. Rte. 6. Of simple architectural styling, the house appears to have been built in different stages, but each of the three sections appear so closely related in age that it is difficult to determine which is the older part.

The largest section is located at the west end and is two bays wide on both floor levels. The main entrance door, formerly surmounted by a transome that has been covered over by clapboard, occupies the first bay from the east end. The doorway, with a plain unornamented surround, currently frames a fully glazed "French" door. The three windows all frame sash of six-over-six panes. Fronting the door is a Victorian Gothic-style pedimented porch with vertical dentils decorating the gable and square tapered posts with inset tapered panels rounded at the top and bottom.

The opposite side of the house, like the front, is two bays wide. A one story shed roofed porch extends the full width of the rear of the house. The area fronting the west end section is completely enclosed and has two windows. All four windows of this elevation frame six-over-six sash. The west end of this section has a centered chimney with stepped shoulders and free-standing stack.

The center section of the house is slightly lower than the west end but is a full two stories high. It has a single six-over-six sash window at both levels of the north side. The rear elevation has a single second floor window and a double-leafed "French" door at the first floor opening into a screened area of the rear porch addition. This portion of the house has a single chimney at the east end that appears at one time to have been exposed and is probably similar in design to the chimney at the west end of the house. It is likely that the middle and west end sections are contemporary with one another and constitute the original house, though this is only conjectured.

The east end section is also two stories and lower than the middle wing. Since the front (north) elevations of the house step back from one another in telescoping fashion yet are flush on the south side, the east wing is the smallest part of the house. It has a single window on both floor levels of the north side but no other openings. The rear porch extending across the south side is enclosed in this area and has a single window on its back wall and a door and window in the east end.

All parts of the house are sheathed with lapped clapboards except the enclosed areas of the porch which are sheathed with "novelty" siding. Except for the front porch of the main section, the house is extremely plain, lacking even simple moldings to trim the windows
