Port Tobacco

mid 18th century

Facing south over the town square, the St. Charles Hotel, known also as the Brawner House and by various other names in its long history, was Port Tobacco's best known and most prosperous tavern-hotels. A large, two-story frame structure built over a partially elevated brick-walled cellar, it had double porches across the front, a rear wing nearly as large as the main block, and other structural appendages. A late-eighteenth century advertisement described it as having 25 bedrooms, a dining room seating 200 people, game room, breakfast room, reception rooms, a proprietor's suite, and quarters for servants. It and the Matthew Blair house and store both received a valuation of $4,000.00 in the 1798 assessments, making them the two most important privately owned properties in Port Tobacco at the time. It continued to be Port Tobacco's most popular hostelry throughout the nineteenth century. An 1881 newspaper account of various social events referred to a dinner-reception held there "in the style for which the accomplished hostess of that establishment is famous." In 1969 the site was partially excavated, exposing a brick-floored cellar room with an expansive cooking fireplace at one end. An analysis of clay pipe stems and other artifacts revealed during the excavation suggested a mid-eighteenth century date of construction.
