DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The George Robinette House is located on the westerly side of West Wilson Road near the intersection of Breakneck Road about four miles southwest of Flintstone, Allegany County, Maryland. The structure is built into the side of a hill that slopes downward to the southwest from the road. It stands amid open and wooded fields.

The house is a two and a half story classically influenced brick structure with foundation walls of roughly cut stone, a hip roof, brick flat arches above the principal windows, and a high basement on the west end resulting from the slope of the land. The principal facade (south side) is approximately symmetrical with five bays and a center entranceway. The two bays to the east of the doorway project outward several feet with a gable and small window above. A one story frame porch with brick and stone under supports, stone steps, and a shed roof stretches across the facade covering the entrance and the bays to the west. The porch has three square posts, chamfered from the balustrade up, and squarish balusters. The entranceway has rectangular sidelights and transom and a panelled door.

A wing extends with a gable end from the easterly side of the back (north side). An L-shape porch with balcony wraps around the north side of the main portion and the west side of the wing. The porch and balcony are replacements of the originals that had deteriorated and were removed by the present owners. The roof of the balcony is an extension of the roof of the house.

The east wall of the house, including the back wing, has five bays with a center door and side lights along it. The west wall of the main portion has two windows, one in each of the outer bays, per floor, including the basement level. The back wall (north side) of the main portion has a door on each level with two windows, the outer, most of which was added in recent years, on the first floor and one on the second. The back wall of the wing is blank except for an attic window while the west side of it has a door and window to each level. The two gable end walls have returns which are extensions of the roof overhang. The brick of the facade is laid in Flemish bond and that of the side walls in common bond.

The roof of the house and the front porch are covered with tin sheets. The roof is pierced by five internal chimneys: two along the west side forming a pair, one on the north end of the wing, and two along the east wall. Several of the chimneys show signs of repair as does the roof overhang.

The principal windows are double-hung wooden sashes with narrow frames and six-over-six lights. The attic windows in the gable end walls have one wooden sash. The main windows of the east, south, and west sides have louvered shutters, most of which probably are original.

The internal arrangement of rooms consists of a center hallway with double parlors along the west side and two large rooms plus the present kitchen in the wing along the east side. The partition between the west rooms on the first floor was removed by the present owners. A small bathroom was recently built into the front room along the east side of the hall. The doorway in the east end wall opens into the center room of the three along that side. The main staircase rises from the first floor along the east side of the hall, terminates at a landing, and continues up along the west wall. The woodwork throughout the interior is rural classical in design. The main type is a variation of the standard form consisting of stepped flat pieces with molded trim applied around the outer edge. The trim found in the double parlors to the west of the hall on the first floor is a variation of the symmetrical moldings commonly used at this time. (See molding profiles attached).

The George Robinette House is structurally sound and in excellent condition. Although changes were made to the interior in adapting the house to conform with the taste and living standards of the present owners, the house appears to retain much of the original fabric.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The George Robinette House is representative of mid nineteenth century rural domestic architecture of the affluent resident of Allegany County. Located in the county's farming region, the house was erected for George Robinette who, in addition to farming activities, operated a tannery near Flintstone.

Robinette purchased the property on which the house stands in 1843. (Allegany County Deeds DD/447) The Wilson family, another name along with Robinette that is associated with the early history of the Flintstone region, acquired the property in 1892 and retained it for over a half a century. (Scharf, vol. 2, p. 1460) The Wilsons were primarily interested in farming activities.

The house exhibits the strong influence that the classical, particularly the Greek Revival, styles had on pre-Civil War architecture in Allegany County. The low pitch hip roof, the double internal end chimneys (on the west wall), the symmetrical interior trim of the principal rooms, rectangular sidelights and transom, and the use of returns on the gable end walls are characteristic of house construction of this period in Western Maryland, particularly Allegany and Washington Counties, and the areas immediately to the north in Pennsylvania. The principal facade (south side) and the floor plan of the house are approximately symmetrical, a hallmark of the classical styles. An interesting feature of the exterior, probably aesthetically oriented, is that the mortar joints are striped with dark paint.

The George Robinette House was purchased by the present owners in 1964 and was refurbished and modernized by them. The farm of which the house is a part contains about two-hundred-twenty acres and is known today as Breakneck Farm, a name applied in recent years.

 (16A.) Thomas Wilson House

On the Breakneck Road near Flintstone is a beautiful old home built by George Robinette in the mid 1800's. George Robinette built many houses in the Flintstone area, but none is quite as well preserved as this old brick edifice. The house itself has been restored painstakingly by its present owners, Lt. Col. & Mrs. Patterson, and is furnished with antiques indicative of that period in County history. The house has several out-buildings and the barn is especially interesting. Its large iron hinges are almost a yard long and are of unique design.
