

CONSOLIDATION COAL COMPANY HOUSE

AL-V-A-033

48 Hope Road, Frostburg

Latter half of 19th century

Coal found in the George's Creek Valley is among the richest and best coking coal in the world. For that reason, during peak operations, the Consolidation Coal Company could afford to build basic frame structures for its respected workers. The coal company houses constructed during the latter half of the 19th century, including this one located north of Frostburg, present a continual reminder of the cultural and mining heritage of Western Allegany County.

The Consolidation Coal Company House is located at 48 Hope Road in Frostburg, Allegany County.

The Consolidation Coal Company House is a one and a half story, three bay wide, rectangular structure. A shed roof addition abuts the main block on the rear side making the building look like a saltbox. The main block of the house is covered with clapboard while the rear addition is done in board and batten. The roof is gabled and is covered in asphalt material. Windows in the building are a combination of six over six and two over two lights. The main entrance which is constructed of horizontal boards, is located on the northeast facade and is covered by a three bay end shed-roofed porch. A single bay end porch is located over a side entrance as well. An original corbeled brick chimney is located in the interior of the building.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

This Consolidation Coal Company House was constructed by the company for some of its workers during the latter half of the 19th century. Coal was quite abundant in the Georges' Creek Valley area at that time. It was part of the famed Pittsburgh Vein, which is among the richest and best coking coal in the world. For that reason, the Consolidation Coal Company could afford to erect basic frame houses for its respected workers. Also during that time period, coal operations were considered to be at peak levels. The coal industry continued to be the biggest cash producer in Western Allegany County until the mid 1940's. The coal company houses constructed during peak operation times present a continued reminder of the cultural and mining heritage of the area.
