Sam Blank Stone House
Blank Road, Bald Knob
ca. 1817

In 1817 a farmer named Fredrick Rigert constructed what is now known as the Samuel Blank House. The house is a two story, five bay wide stone structure with a date stone located in the southwest gable end. The stone has the initials "I.F." and "F.R." and the year 1817 carved on it. Unfortunately, the house is in poor condition; however, many fine details are still visable including a delicate dentilated entablature.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Rigert Stone House is located 50' northwest of Sam Blank Road, a few hundred yards south of the Pennsylvania state line. The house faces southeast overlooking rolling wooded mountains to the south towards Mt. Savage. A stone and timber-frame bank barn stands to the southwest of the house.

The two story, five-bay by two-bay farmhouse is constructed of carefully laid random rubble sandstone masonry with distinct quoins at the corners. Flat arch lintels feature prominent keystones. A datestone at the top of the southwest gable end bears the inscriptions "I.F.", "F.R.", and "1817."

An asphalt-clad gable roof covers the house, which is heated by an interior brick chimney at either end. The northern chimney has been demolished down to the roofline.

A hip roof porch with turned posts and balusters and corner brackets stretches across the front facade.

Central entrances appear on the front and rear facade; the windows are fitted with 2/2 sash. Two tiny (1' 3" square) single-pane windows (complete with keystone lintels) light either end of the attic. Ovolo moldings trim the architraves. The windows rest on large protruding sills. A finely molded dentil cornice trims the eaves line.

As the land slopes downhill to the southeast, the stone cellar is exposed on the facade. A door and window open into the cellar under the porch, and a small two-paned window and a coal chute appear at the southwest end.

The main entrance is distinguished by paneled jambs and a four-light transom. Each of these panes features a curved top. The door, which appears to date from the turn of this century, includes a large window.

The rear of the house exhibits three bays. A series of put-log holes between the two floor levels may once have accommodated a porch. A one-story, two-room frame kitchen once covered the two western bays, as indicated by the gable roof outline visible on the stone wall. In the westernmost bay, the window has been shortened. The central door has been blocked. A door occupies the remaining bay. It is covered by a small porch of recent construction.

The floor plan consists of a central stair hall with two rooms to either side. The front parlors are larger, and include the fireplaces. The southern parlor retains its fireplace mantel and chair rail, which both display cavetto/astagal trim. The windows feature paneled jambs and ovolo trim. A small cupboard is set into either side of the chimney block in both parlors. The partition between the south parlor and the rear room has been removed.

The original stair was replaced by Sam Blank early in this century. The new stair has a square oak newel post and square balusters. Corner block architrave trim believed to date to the same period as the stairs appears in the hall and the north parlor.

The second floor plan matches the first floor. All of the partitions are constructed Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The land in and around the Mount Savage area was originally owned by Andrew Bruce, the first circuit court judge in Cumberland. Bruce owned a plot of land known as "Mt. Pleasant" which included six military lots and comprised 1, 191 acres.<sup>1</sup> During the first decade of the 19th century the population west of Cumberland began to grow and Bruce sold much of his original holdings.

In 1817 Fredrick Rigert constructed what is now commonly known as the Samuel Blank Stone House on land which had originally belonged both to Bruce and to the Aronld family, one of the original families in Mt. Savage.<sup>2</sup> The house is a two story, five bay wide stone structure with a date stone located in the southwest gable end. The stone has the initials "I.F." and "F.R." (undoubtedly for Fredrick Rigert) and the year 1817 carved on it.

The Rigert House is the second oldest extant dwelling in the Arnold Settlement area, preceded only by the Uhl Log House (AL-V-B-113). The house is enriched by a fine variety of original trim. The stone construction of the house is especially significant. The lintels and quoins laid in sandstone chosen for contrasting shades of light and dark stone distinguish this as some of the finest stonework in this region. Also of particular significance is the "fachwerk" interior wall construction, which is sometimes found in 18th century Pennsylvania German construction. This is the only known example of this construction form in the Maryland Coal region.

of wide, beaded, tongue-and-groove boards. Several six-panel doors with raised molded panels survive on this floor.

An apparently original boxed stair, situated above the main stair, leads to the attic. A batten door opens onto the stair. In both the attic and the cellar large summer beams are visible. The half-pole common rafters are mortised, tenoned and pegged at the apex and bear builders' sequential Roman numerals. These rafters are braced with re-used chamfered porch posts. The interior surfaces of the chimneys and the stone gables are plastered with a crude mud and straw mixture. Flooring nails exhibit a double-struck head.

Mrs. Geary, owner of the house, reports that until she covered the ceiling joists on the first and second floors, they were exposed and unwhitewashed.

A cellar stair is located under the main stairway. In this area the wall construction of the north parlor is visible. Heavy posts measuring 4" by 8", set with the narrow dimension forming the depth of the wall, are located about five feet apart. Riven lathing measuring approximately 3/4" thick by 1½-3" wide is spring into a groove in either side of each post. The lath is covered with a mud and straw mixture, and a thin plaster "white coat." It is presumed that the posts were boxed and beaded. Such a treatment appears midway along the interior wall of the south parlor.

Root Cellar: A shed roofed semi-subterranean stone root cellar adjoins the northeast end of the front porch of the house. The most interesting feature of this cellar is a trough in which dairy products were cooled with well water.

Barn: A timber frame bank barn on a well-laid stone foundation to the southwest of the house adjoins the stone wall of a second barn. Several ventilation slits and two small windows pierce the random rubble stonework of the ruin.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Sam Blank Stone House is located on the Blank Road near its intersection with Bald Knob on Bald Knob mountain near Mt. Savage, Allegany County.

The Sam Blank House is a two story, five bay wide rectangular structure that is constructed of stone laid in a combination of coursed and squared rubble bonding. The walls are plain with the exception of quoins and a date stone which is located in the southwest gable end. The building rests on a low stone foundation. The roof is gabled and has been covered with replaced asphalt shingles. The building has a boxed cornice and returns and a fine dentilated entablature. Windows in the structure are double hung, pegged, wooden sashes with two-over-two lights. All windows have flat structural arches with keystones. Small square windows are located in the gable ends. The main entrance is located on the southeast facade and features a vertically paneled door with a narrow transom light. A five bay hipped-roofed end porch is also located on the southeast facade. It is supported by brackets, turned posts and a ballustrade. Two replaced brick end chimneys are located at the gable ends of the house.
