The Eckhart farm consists of a turn of the century dwelling and twentieth century small horse barn. Located west of the town of Eckhart Mines, the farmhouse is a cross gabled, frame building rising two stories in height, with several one story additions. Numerous alterations including the removal of all historic interior trim, replacement windows, the addition of artificial siding and two large, one-story modern additions in the rear of the building have significantly reduced the building's integrity. The horse barn is a small, one story frame building, covered in sheetrock, capped by a metal, gable roof. Containing two stalls, the barn is located southeast of the house at some distance. The property consists of common building types from the turn of the twentieth century which do not exhibit unique architectural features. Less altered examples of the building types exist throughout the county.
