DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Lybarger Brick House is located on Kings Road, Ellerslie, Allegany County.

The building basically consists of a two story, seven bay wide, rectangular shaped structure. Wall construction is brick, laid in American Common Bond and some in Flemish Bond. Variations used are three to one and five to one. Wall features are plain. The building is supported by a low, brick foundation, featuring both beveled, and moulded brick water table. The roof of the building is gable flank and covered with asphalt shingles: replaced. Eaves of the roof exhibit a close fascia. Windows in the building are pegged, double hung, with mitred wooden sash frames with six-over-six and nine-over-six lights. Window trim features flat arches and gauged flat arches at the heads and lugsills at the bases of the windows. Plain trim surrounds the sides of the windows with some exhibiting fixed wooden shutters. There are three chimneys in the building. All are original, made of brick with corbeled caps. Two are located flush end and one is central with two chimney stacks. The main entrance is located on the southeast facade whose hardware is replaced, exhibiting a paneled, verticle board door. The southeast facade features a full - height portico, pedimented; with a balcony; and supported by four square columns. The northwest facade features a wooden closed verandah covered with a hip roof.

The building is structurally sound with moderate remodeling and still retains most of its original appearance.

OLD KING FARM ALLEGANY COUNTY

JUST outside the town of Ellerslie, close to the Pennsylvania boundary line, is Old King Farm, reputed to have been erected in 1793 by Jesse Tomlinson. A more beautiful site could not have been chosen for the first brick dwelling in Allegany County. Green-clad mountains rise on both sides of the valley in which it is located and a branch of Wills Creek flows nearby.

There is no doubt that the bricks of this house were made on the farm and that the stones for the foundation cellar running under the whole structure were gathered from the surrounding fields. The original house contained only three rooms, but later a hall and another room were added using the same type of brick, so that the two-and-a-half storey building with its three small brick chimneys jutting from the roof remains a harmonious whole.

There are two front doors. One opens directly into a large room with a fireplace on the left, and entrances to two smaller rooms with corner fireplaces on the right. This was the first section of the house to be built. All three of the rooms have ceilings and a moulding of hand-planed wood. A back door gives on an unroofed porch. The second front door opens into the hall from which rise the stairs to the upper floors. The stairway has none of the flourishes often found in southern manor houses. On the right of the hall is a door to the large sitting room, and on the left is the entrance to the dining room which has a fine built-in corner cupboard. The fireplace is against the left wall, but it has been closed up and its heating facilities replaced by those of a stove. In this room, as well as in all the others on the first floor, the only adornment is a chair rail, and the smallness of the twelve-paned windows bear witness to the high cost of glass in those days.

The exterior of the house has a wide wooden cornice under the eaves. There has been no effort to plant a formal garden, but the beauty of the surroundings is such that any attempt to improve on nature would impair the repose and simplicity of the homestead.

In a graveyard, some three hundred yards from Old King Farm on the side of a hill, are buried members of the Tomlinson family, many of whom died young. On the tombstone of Benjamin Tomlinson, who passed away at the age of five months and fifteen days, is written:

"Parents dear, do not weep.
I am not dead, but only asleep."

From the Tomlinson family the house passed into the possession of the Kings, who lived there so long the property took their name. From them it was acquired by B. Y. Cunningham, who sold it to a Mr. Reinhardt. The present owner, Caleb White, purchased it in 1929.

There is a story that the builder of Old King Farm buried a pot of gold on the property. He died with his secret untold. An old slave who knew where the gold was hidden would not tell, either, but his ghost comes back to wander about restlessly, seeking some one to whom he can deliver up his trust.
