Originally constructed as an I-house, the present configuration of the Clupp house is an L-shape. Rising two and a half stories, this frame dwelling was constructed at the turn of the twentieth century. The building is characterized by its German siding, cross gable roof and stone foundation. An addition on the south elevation after 1945 provides the rental dwelling with its current footprint. As a representative of vernacular residential architecture in western Maryland, the building contributes to the Lonaconing NRHD.

The building will be demolished as the result of the development project.

CAPSULE SUMMARY
FRANCES CLUPP HOUSE
455-1/2 West Main Street
Lonaconing, Maryland
AL-VI-B-330

The Frances Clupp House at 455-1/2 West Main Street was constructed between 1897 and 1906 as a single-family residence on property owned by David M. Evans. The building served throughout its history as rental property on land owned by the Evans family. The two-and-a-half-story building is constructed of frame, clad in German siding, with a cross gable roof. As originally constructed, the freestanding dwelling was three bays wide and two bays deep with an I-house plan. An addition was constructed on the facade of the building by the mid-20th century, giving the building its present L-shape. Located within the Lonaconing Historic District, the Frances Clupp House survives as an example of the residential architecture commonly constructed in rural Western Maryland at the turn of the 20th century.

The building, currently known as the Frances Clupp House, was erected between 1897 and 1906 as a single-family dwelling. The two-and-a-half-story building is constructed of frame, clad in German siding, with a cross gable roof. As originally constructed, the freestanding dwelling was three bays wide and two bays deep with an I-house plan. An addition was constructed on the facade of the building by the mid-20th century, giving the building it's present L-shape. Located within the Lonaconing Historic District, the significantly altered and deteriorated building stands as an example of the type of rural structures constructed at the turn of the century.

SITE

The Clupp House is one of a grouping of three buildings located at 455-1/2 West Main Street. The buildings are set approximately fifty feet east from the town's main thoroughfare at the intersection of Star and Ayers alleys with Douglas Avenue. The freestanding Clupp House, facing south, is situated roughly midpoint between the Main Street and George's Creek.

EXTERIOR

ORIGINAL APPEARANCE

The two-and-a-half-story Clupp House as originally constructed had an I-house plan. The dwelling symmetrically measured three bays wide and two bays deep. The frame building, set upon a random stone foundation, was clad in German siding and covered by a side gable roof adorned with cornice returns. The roof was pierced by an interior end brick chimney and a central brick chimney. According to historic maps, the facade of the building was adorned with a one bay wide frame porch.

Sometime after 1945, a one-bay wide addition was constructed at the eastern end of the south elevation. Modest renovations, including the replacement of surrounds, doors and windows, created a cohesive L-shaped dwelling, reflecting the Victorian period. The exterior was painted for the first time in the 1970s.

PRESENT APPEARANCE

The Clupp House is constructed of frame, clad in German siding with corner boards, and set upon a random coursed stone foundation. The southeastern portion of the building, the post 1945 addition, is set upon a hollow terracotta tile foundation that has been patched with bricks at the southwest corner. The L-shaped building has a cross gable roof sheathed in asphalt shingles. It is pierced by an interior end brick chimney and two central brick chimneys. The roof overhangs slightly with a boxed cornice, cornice returns, and scrolled brackets, which appear on the facade only. A partial porch wraps around the inset of the L-shaped plan, joining the post 1945 addition with the main block of the building.

The facade (inset of L-shaped plan, facing southwest) of the Clupp House is covered on the first story by a partial porch with a shed roof. The roof, sheathed in asphalt shingles, is supported by turned posts and pilasters. The repaired open balustrade contains vertical rails as well as flat sawed balusters. The foundation of the porch is obscured from view by vertical boards. The south elevation of the main block of the dwelling has a single opening on the first story that originally served as a window. The entry opening has a five-paneled wood door capped by a two-light transom. It is trimmed with center beaded pilaster surrounds, a wood sill, hollow metal door knob, and straight ogee-molded cornice with a plain frieze. To the east of the opening is ghosting of a central passage entry. The second story of the main block has a single opening with a 2/2 wood sash window. The window is trimmed with square-edged surrounds, wood sill, and a pedimented lintel. Ghosting of a centrally placed window is located to the east of the opening, symmetrically placed above the original central passage entry of the main block.

The west elevation of the post 1945 addition, within the facade inset, has a single entry opening and standard window opening on the first story. The entry, finished with square-edged surrounds and a pedimented lintel, contains a five-paneled wood door and screen door. The opening is capped by a single-light transom. The window opening, located in the south bay, is set approximately five inches higher than the entry. Filled with a 2/2 wood sash window, it has the identical square-edged trim and pedimented lintel as the entry. The second story of the addition has a single opening with a 2/2 wood sash window. The window is trimmed with square-edged surrounds, wood sill, and a pedimented lintel.

The overhanging roofline of the inset is marked by a boxed cornice, plain frieze, and scrolled modillions. The detailing is continuous from the main block of the building to the post 1945 addition.

The south elevation of the addition has single window openings on the first and second stories. The symmetrically placed openings are finished with 2/2 windows, square-edged surrounds, wood sill, and a pedimented lintel. The basement level of the south elevation is constructed of hollow terracotta tile with brick repairs at the southwest corner. It is pierced by a single square opening with a wood door and surface hinges. The opening has square-edged surrounds and a wood sill. The roofline is edged with a boxed cornice, returns, and a plain frieze.

The raised east side elevation of the building includes the side wall of the main block as well as the side wall of the addition. Beginning at the southeast corner of the addition extending north, the elevation is set upon a foundation of hollow terracotta tiles, German siding, and random coursed stone. The foundation is pierced by two single entry wood doors and an infilled window opening. The first story of the south elevation is covered by a wood frame porch, extending from the southeast corner of the addition to the edge of the window opening on the main block of the building. Covered by a shed roof clad in asphalt shingles, the porch is supported by turned posts with a closed wood rail. Stairs to the raised porch, which are set upon wood posts, are no longer extant.

The first story of the east side elevation has two window openings flanking a single entry door. The 2/2 windows are identically trimmed with square-edged surrounds, wood sills, and pedimented lintels. The entry is trimmed with square-edged surrounds, pedimented lintel, and three-light transom. It contains a six-paneled wood door covered by a screen door. The second story has two window openings, one in the addition and one in the main block. Both openings have 2/2 windows with square-edged surrounds, wood sills, and pedimented lintels.

The north rear elevation is raised slightly by the random coursed stone foundation. The elevation has no openings, save a single window opening at the second story. The 2/2 window has square-edged surrounds, wood sills, and pedimented lintel that extends onto the plain frieze of the building's entablature. The elevation is finished by the boxed cornice and plain frieze.

The west side elevation of the building, measuring two bays wide, features two equally spaced window openings on the first story and one window opening on the second story. The opening in the southern bay has ghosting below, indicating at it originally functioned as an entry. Asymmetrically placed, the openings have square-edged surrounds, wood sills, and pedimented lintels.

INTERIOR

Although the interior was not included in the survey due to the deteriorated state of the building, an examination of the post 1945 addition was conducted through a window. The walls of the one-room addition are finished with a beaded wainscoting and molded chair rail with a plaster field. The door openings are trimmed by central beaded casings, while the windows have square-edged casing.

EARLY HISTORY OF LONACONING

The small town of Lonaconing, incorporated in 1890, is located approximately fourteen miles southwest of the county seat of Cumberland in Alleghany County, Maryland. Presently, Lonaconing contains a variety of 19th and early 20th century commercial, industrial, and residential buildings which attest to the development of Lonaconing as a center of the iron, coal, and silk industries in the George's Creek Valley of Western Maryland.

Lonaconing was began as a town and commercial center with the arrival of entrepreneurs, John Alexander of Annapolis and Philip T. Tyson. The businessmen purchased a tract known as "Commonwealth" in 1833, which contained 3,817 acres along George's Creek (now Lonaconing). In 1836, they petitioned the Maryland Legislature for a corporate charter which would permit them to raise further capital for their proposed operations through the sale of shares. Later that same year, the Maryland General Assembly granted the right to form the corporation, and the George's Creek Mining Company was formed with the authority "to open and work such mines of coal, iron, and other minerals as may exist on the tract of land on George's Creek known as Commonwealth, now owned by them...." The company constructed a furnace complex to manufacture pig iron, using coal and coke rather than charcoal for the smelting process. The Lonaconing iron furnace was the first in the United States to successfully use bituminous coal and coke in making pig iron.

The George's Creek Coal and Iron Company was also responsible for bring workers to the area and constructing permanent housing. The company was dependent on local farmers to construct various parts of the furnace complex, the store, church, sawmill, and other buildings which made up the original village. By 1837, the company had established a village of 700 people. Living under the "Rules of Residency" set by the company, the workers were required to work every day except Sundays and Christmas, labor from sunrise to sunset, and make purchased only from the company store. This system of total company domination did not end until the 1860s, when the company began to sell off its sizable land holdings.

The furnace produced pig iron from 1839 until 1855, when the company turned to the production of coal. The development of the coal industry prompted growth in the George's Creek Valley, especially Lonaconing. Numerous coal companies were formed and mines were opened, with workers flocking from Scotland, Wales, England, Ireland, and Germany. Business boomed and all varieties of stores were established to meet the needs of the people. The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the first railroad line to Cumberland, arrived by 1851, and the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad tunneled a distance of 500 feet under Frostburg in 1856 to make Lonaconing easily accessible.

PROPERTY HISTORY

David Koontz, together with Salem and Margaret Koontz, purchased a large tract of improved property from the George's Creek Coal and Iron Company in the late 1860s. The land, designated as the Mill Lot, stretched along what is now known as West Main Street, just to the west of George's Creek. By 1874, David Koontz had subdivided the land into two parcels, bisecting them with a twelve foot alley that ran east to west. On September 22, 1874, the southern portion, or lot one, was conveyed to Patrick Tully, while the northern portion, or lot two, was conveyed to George Henry Fresh for $1,425. Located in the heart of business district, lot two was bounded by Star Alley, Douglas Avenue, George's Creek, and a modest segment of the commercial strip of West Main Street.

During the period between 1870 and 1880, the town of Lonaconing continued to grow and prosper. From a population of 800 in 1865, the community has grown to 2,808 in 1878. Regarded as one of the largest and most prominent mining towns in the George's Creek Valley, Lonaconing developed a central business district along Main Street, and residential neighborhoods on Church and Douglas streets. The town boasted a large general store, two hotels, an opera house, a variety of churches, banks, and two newspapers.

Disaster struck the town of Lonaconing on September 7, 1881 when a fire destroyed 53 buildings in just three hours. The fire ravaged all of the business district along Main and Union streets to George's Creek and many of the houses from the Maryland Hotel to Koontz Run. One year after the fire, in 1882, George H. Fresh, and his wife Lucy Fresh, sold lot two to Thomas Carr. In 1884, the property was threatened again by one of the worst floods in the town's history which eradicated houses and businesses along George's Creek.

Faced with adversity, Lonaconing immediately took steps to strengthen and reconstruct the community. With much of the rebuilding being undertaken around the surviving buildings, the town was officially incorporated in 1890 and began to lay permanent sidewalks and streets. During this period, the property owned by Thomas Carr was subdivided and leased to numerous merchants, who assisted in the reconstruction of the town by erecting commercial structures fronting on Main Street and Star Alley. According to the Sanborn map of 1891, the frame structures were occupied by a confectionery, saloon, meat market, newspaper office, and buggy shed.

BUILDING HISTORY

In 1892, Thomas Carr sold the improved property to David M. Evans for $3,650. Although the functions of the buildings had changed, the land was not further developed between 1892 and 1897. The growing population of Lonaconing (approximately 7,000 by 1900), prompted the construction of several single-family dwellings on the Evans property by 1906. Facing south, the three frame dwellings were constructed east of the commercial building on Main Street. The freestanding Clupp House, designated as 455-1/2 West Main Street on the 1906 Sanborn map, was located roughly midpoint between Main Street and George's Creek. Two semi-detached buildings, known as 455-1/3 and 455-1/4 Main Street, were located to the east of the Clupp House. Never occupied by Evans, the dwellings were leased over the years to merchants, factory workers, and miners.

By September 1910, David M. and Martha S. Evans transferred the property to H. Clay Evans. Under the direction of H. Clay Evans, the large parcel was developed by the construction of a motion picture theater which was located at the corner of Main Street and Star Alley; an Armory Hall fronting on Star Alley; and a frame hall to the southeast of the Clupp House which was commonly known as the Band Hall.

H. Clay Evans died in August 1926, bequeathing his estate jointly to his wife Helen V. Evans and Benjamin H. Evans. Within a year, Benjamin Evans was the sole owner of the property, retaining the entire parcel until his death in 1952. Under his ownership the parcel was further improved by the construction of the Sloan Brothers Glass Cutting Building, which was sited on George's Creek. Two semi-detached frame buildings fronting Main Street were replaced by a larger brick commercial structure. The semi-detached single-family dwellings designated as 455-1/3 and 455-1/4 Main Street were replaced with the present freestanding building, known as the Star Alley House. Additionally, the Clupp House was extensively altered by the addition of a wing, giving the building it's present L-shape.

Mary S. Evans, the widow of Benjamin Evans, inherited the property in 1952 and together with numerous other lots, transferred it to the Evans Realty Company, Inc. in 1962. During the next two decades, the realty company began to subdivide and sell portions of the large square parcel. In June 1984, Frances E. Clupp and her son Gibson F. Clupp purchased an irregularly shaped lot located to the east of Main Street. Included in the sale was the Clupp House, the Star Alley House, and the Band Hall, all of which encroached onto property retained by Evans Realty Company, Inc.

Frances Clupp resided in the main dwelling which bears her name, while her son lived in the Star Alley House. The Band Hall, traditionally used as a practice hall for Lonaconing's City Band, was used as storage space by the Clupps. By 1992, the Clupps had defaulted on their mortgage and the property reverted back to Evans Realty Company, Inc. The realty company continues to own the buildings, which are currently vacant and in a state of severe deterioration.

The town of Lonaconing has continuously experienced a reduction in population, due greatly in part to the decline in coal production. Despite this, a limited amount of mining and commercial businesses linger to serve the historic community. Today, Lonaconing continues to exemplify the character of a late 19th to early 20th century mining town, with a cohesive collection of buildings that reflect the economic growth and decline of this region of the state.
