

CAPSULE SUMMARY
Adolph Torovsky House (AA-1134)
206 King George Street

The building at 206 King George Street was originally constructed between 1894 and 1896 for Adolph Torovsky. The two-and-a-half-story building was the last freestanding dwelling erected in this block on the northeast side of King George Street following its subdivision by Dennis Griffin. The substantial parcel was owned and improved in the 18th century by Charles Carroll, and subsequently purchased in the early 19th century by Jeremiah Chase. A good example of an urban Italianate style dwelling, 206 King George Street was owned and occupied by the Torovsky family until the 1940s.

The two-and-a-half-story, wood frame dwelling was designed in a vernacular Italianate style and similar in form and detail to the house at 200 King George Street (AA-1131). This single detached structure is set upon a solid brick foundation and is covered with a side gable roof. The three-bay wide building has a side-passage plan, historically accentuated by a full-width front porch. The original frame walls are clad with German siding on the front elevation and asbestos shingles on the side walls. A contemporary brick stoop with iron railing leads to the side-passage entry. A two-story ell, added to the house by 1903, extends across the rear elevation.

The two-and-a-half-story, wood frame dwelling at 206 King George Street was constructed between 1894 and 1896. Designed in a vernacular Italianate style and similar in form and detail to the house at 200 King George Street, the single detached structure is set upon a solid brick foundation. Covered with a side gable roof, the three-bay wide building has a side-passage plan, historically accentuated by a full-width front porch that is no longer extant. The original wood frame walls are clad with German siding on the front elevation and asbestos shingles on the side walls. A contemporary brick stoop with iron railing leads to the side-passage entry. A two-story ell, added to the house by 1903, extends across the rear elevation.

The property also contains portions of a building that overlaps 204-206 King George Street. This building is significant as it contains a hypocaust, a system used in Ancient Roman times to conduct hot gases from a furnace into the rooms above through a hollow floor and tile flues within the walls. This structure appears to have been originally constructed as a kitchen or garden structure in the middle part of the 18th century.<sup>1</sup>

The facade (southwest elevation) is divided into three bays. The first story consists of the side-passage entry door and two single 2/2 windows. The entry, reached by brick replacement steps, includes a four-paneled replacement door and a single-light transom, surrounded by square-edged architrave with a molded door head. The 2/2 windows have similar molded heads and wood sills. The second story has three symmetrically placed 2/2 windows with molded heads and wood sills.

The character-defining cornice of the house consists of four large brackets, visually dividing the facade into three bays. The space between the brackets is finished by wood modillions. The side gable roof is clad with asbestos shingles and has two front gable dormers with pediments, square-edged trim, and 2/2 windows. The side walls of the gables are clad with wood shingles.

The northwest elevation includes the northwest wall of the main block and the rear ell. It is clad with asbestos shingles and has a single small opening on the second story of the front bay of the rear ell.

The southeast elevation, also clad with asbestos shingles, has two single 2/2 windows in the rear bay of the main block of the house on both stories. A single 2/2 window is located at the attic level in the end gable. The basement has two two-light windows and a metal coal chute door, embossed with three Gothic arches.

The rear and interior of the building were not accessible for survey.

The building at 206 King George Street was originally constructed between 1894 and 1896 for Adolph Torovsky. The two-and-a-half-story building was the last freestanding dwelling erected in this block on the northeast side of King George Street following its subdivision by Dennis Griffin in 1890. The substantial parcel was owned and improved by Charles Carroll in the 18th century, and eventually purchased by Jeremiah Chase. A good example of an urban Italianate style dwelling, 206 King George Street was owned and occupied by the Torovsky family until the 1940s. Additionally, the property encompasses portions of a brick hypocaust that has been structurally connected to the dwelling at 204 King George Street. The hypocaust, used in Ancient Roman times to conduct hot gases from a furnace into the rooms above through a hollow floor and tile flues within the walls, appears to have been originally constructed as a kitchen or garden structure in the middle part of the 18th century.

PROPERTY HISTORY

The property on which the building at 206 King George Street stands was historically associated with Margaret Dulany, the wife of Dr. Alexander Hamilton of Scotland. Stretching along the northeast side of King George Street, the property was purchased from Charles Carroll the Chirurgeon (doctor) in 1747 for 450 pounds by Daniel Dulany the Elder as a wedding gift for his daughter Margaret. Prior to its ownership by Dulany, the property had been improved by the construction of numerous dwellings that fronted Hanover Street to the east and landscaped gardens stretching west to King George Street. Based on historical documentation and physical evidence, it appears that the extant hypocaust is contemporary to the mid-18th century dwellings.

Following the death of Hamilton in May 1756, Dulany married William Murdock, the son of John and Katherine Murdock. William Murdock was the sheriff of Prince George's County in 1740 and a member of the Maryland General Assembly from 1749 to 1769. With the death of her second husband in 1769, Margaret Dulany sold the property to Richard Sprigg in 1772. As the original purchaser of the land, Daniel Dulany the Elder simultaneously devised a confirmatory deed to Richard Sprigg.

The property was conveyed by Richard and Margaret Sprigg to their son-in-law John Francis Mercer in 1790. Within the next five years, the property stretching along King George Street had been conveyed twice, eventually purchased by Judge Jeremiah Townley

Chase. One-time mayor of Annapolis, Chase resided in the Hammond-Harwood House (1774-1776, William Buckland) at 19 Maryland Avenue.

Discovered in an area measuring 20" x 18" x 24," artifacts uncovered in a circa 1957 excavation have been positively date to the first half of the 19th century and indicate a family with children and naval connections occupied the site in circa 1830.<sup>2</sup> With Chase and his family living in the Hammond-Harwood House, it is believed the property along King George Street was used as rental during his lifetime.

Upon the death of Chase in 1828, his numerous lots were devised among his five children. The Hammond-Harwood House was conveyed to Frances Townley Chase Loockerman, while the property along the northeast side of King George Street south of Maryland Avenue was bequeathed to Hester Anne Chase. Chase, born in July 1791, was the youngest of Judge Chase's children. Unmarried, Chase purchased the Chase-Lloyd House at 22 Maryland Avenue (1769-1774, William Buckland) following the circa 1847 fire that destroyed her primary residence at the King George Street property. Subsequently, the site was improved by the construction of a one-and-a-half-story wood frame dwelling with a large wood frame stable to the rear that Chase utilized as rental property.

As one of three nieces to inherit property from Chase in 1875, Hester Anne Chase Ridout became the sole owner of the King George Street property. The 1880 census records indicate the dwelling was leased to United States Naval Academy gardener Martin Stein. An immigrant from Germany, Stein lived in the dwelling with his wife and seven children until his death by drowning in Baltimore in 1885.

In December 1888, the estate of Hester Anne Chase Ridout, deceased, was bequeathed to her niece Sallie Hammond Marriott Chase (1834-1911). Unmarried, Sallie Chase retained ownership until 1890, when it was conveyed to Dennis and Anna A. Griffin for $3,000. Griffin, <sup>2</sup> Henry Wright, "204 King George Street, Annapolis, MD: Excavation of Hypocaust," circa 1957. The discovery of early 19th century artifacts could suggest that the hypocaust was constructed between 1800-1825, rather than circa 1847 as insinuated by historical documentation; yet, additional documentation and physical investigations must be conducted to more fully understand this structure and its history.

originally from County Limerick, Ireland, was the superintendent's coachman at the United States Naval Academy and caretaker of government farms.

BUILDING HISTORY

Within months of purchasing the parcel, Griffin began to subdivide the King George Street property into six lots, selling them individually. The property now designated as 206 King George Street was purchased in 1894 by Adolph and Annie Torovsky. Between 1894 and 1896, the Italianate style dwelling was constructed on the property fronting King George Street. Torovsky was assessed in 1896 for a single frame dwelling sited on a lot measuring 25 feet by 155 feet, valued at $1,875.

Adolph Torovsky (circa 1867-1945) was born in Prague, Czechoslovakia. Torovsky studied under Johann Strauss, II in Vienna, where he was a member of the 26th Hungarian Regiment Band. He immigrated to the United States in 1892, moving to Annapolis to serve as trumpet player for the Naval Academy Band. Torovsky retired as director of the band in 1922.<sup>3</sup>

Between 1901 and 1903, over half of the block on which 206 King George Street was constructed had been purchased by the United States Naval Academy for future expansions. All of the wood frame and brick dwellings, the majority of which had been erected between 1844 and 1891, were razed. The wood frame dwelling utilized as rental housing by the Chase/Ridout family was also demolished to allow for the construction of officers' housing.<sup>4</sup> By 1913, a security fence was constructed directly to the southeast of 198 King George Street and 195 Hanover Street to separate the town from the school, thereby obscuring the circa 1908 dwellings erected by the Naval Academy.

Adolph Torovsky and his wife Annie sold the King George Street property where they lived in 1944 to Inez Zaragoza Moss, the widow of Robert Graham Moss. Inez Moss retained ownership for only two years, selling the property in 1946 when she relocated to Montana.

The dwelling was purchased by Sarah. O. Schlacks of Germantown, Pennsylvania.

The city directory for 1954, the year Schlacks conveyed the property to Carl McMillan, indicate 206 King George Street was leased to Mrs. Vivian W. Smith. Additionally, the city directory notes the building was utilized for commercial purposes, known as "Red Door Antiques." The McMillans, however, ceased to operate the building commercially and occupied the dwelling until 1984, when they moved to Canada. Present owners John A. and Joan D. Caldwell have owned and occupied the dwelling since that time.
