

CAPSULE SUMMARY
30 Fleet Street
AA-1275

The modest frame residence at 30 Fleet Street was built as one of three, attached, single-family dwellings ca. 1878. Sited on a portion of the land set aside for Governor Francis Nicholson in 1696, the row of three dwellings at 26-30 Fleet Street, provides a representative example of the domestic rowhouse building form constructed principally as worker-class rental property in the mid-to late 19th century in Annapolis.

Located on the northeast side of the street, 30 Fleet Street is a modest, two-story, two-bay frame dwelling covered with a gable roof. It is located at the northwestern end of the three attached dwellings. It is separated from 28 Fleet Street by a narrow, covered passageway on the first story and is attached to the pair of dwellings northwest of it at 32-34 Fleet Street. The facade is clad with contemporary, aluminum siding and consists of replacement windows and door.

Jeremiah Hughes, an influential businessman and owner of the Maryland Republican, appears to have constructed the three dwellings on Fleet Street. Following his death in 1879, the property was sold, and the three houses were rented out to working-class African Americans. In 1921, 28 and 30 were purchased by Jacob Blum, a grocer who lived and worked at 6-8 Fleet Street; Blum eventually amassed several properties on this side of the street which he used for investment purposes.

The three modest dwellings at 26-28-30 Fleet Street<sup>1</sup> were built together ca. 1878 on the north side of Fleet Street.<sup>2</sup> The two-story, two-bay buildings are similar to other pairs and groups of attached rowhouses that make up the narrow Fleet Street and are identical, in form and massing, to one another. Some details of each have been altered since the original period of construction.

EXTERIOR

Set upon altered brick pier foundations (solid on the front elevation and filled in on the exposed sides), each of the three dwellings is a two-bay frame structure with a side entrance. A continuous gable roof extends across all three buildings, as does a boxed wood cornice. Narrow wood cornerboards, still intact, historically delineated the three individual buildings, while contrasting paint colors and varying treatments of walls, windows and doors clearly define the three houses today. The front elevations of each of the three buildings is flat with no projections; a narrow sidewalk separates the houses from the street.

The dwelling at 30 Fleet Street is located at the northwestern end of the three buildings. It is separated on the first story from 28 Fleet Street by a narrow, covered passageway and is attached to the pair of dwellings northwest of it at 32-34 Fleet Street. The facade (southwestern elevation) of 30 Fleet Street is clad with contemporary, aluminum siding and consists of a side entrance and window on the first story. The entry, located in the southeastern end bay and reached by a concrete stoop, features a single, wood panelled and six-light replacement door with a metal screen door in front. A 6/6 window is located in the northwestern bay and is set within a central-reeded trim. Additionally, the window is ornamented with a wood flowerbox. Two 6/6 replacement windows with metal awnings are located at the second story. Above the boxed cornice rises the gable roof. Sheathed with standing seam metal and covered with tar, the roof features a central parged brick chimney.

<sup>1</sup> The buildings were historically designated 808, 809 and 810 on the 1885 Sanborn Map and 12, 14 and 16 on the 1891 and 1897 Sanborn Maps.

<sup>2</sup> The date of construction is based upon map findings: it is not clear whether the buildings appear on the 1858 Sachse Bird's Eye View of Annapolis, but they do appear on the 1878 Hopkins Map.

The row of dwellings at 26-28-30 Fleet Street, constructed in the ca. 1878, are typical examples of the domestic rowhouse building form constructed principally as worker-class rental property in Annapolis. One of three dwellings constructed on Fleet Street by Jeremiah Hughes, the two-story dwellings served as rental properties throughout most of their history. Currently, well-maintained, the buildings contribute to the historical and cultural understanding of the development of the city's working class environment in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

SITE HISTORY

The land on which 30 Fleet Street stands was originally a portion of the land surveyed and set aside for Governor Francis Nicholson in 1696. Nicholson, influential in the town planning of Annapolis, directed that the newly established town of Annapolis be "surveyed and laid out in the most commodious and convenient parte of the said Towne six acres of Land intire for the erecting a Court House and other buildings as shall thought be necessary and convenient."<sup>3</sup> The land located to the south of the State House, encompassed by State Circle, Main, Francis, and East Streets, was specifically set aside for Nicholson, who intended to use the property for a garden, vineyard, and site of a summer house.<sup>4</sup> In 1699, Francis Nicholson left Maryland to serve as the Governor of Virginia, but retained part of his Annapolis properties until his death in 1728.

In 1704 following the destruction of all Annapolis land records, a portion of the Nicholson land was claimed by Thomas Bordley.<sup>5</sup> In 1769, Charles Wallace purchased a large tract of this land, which stretched from the foot of Church Street up to State House Circle. Charles Wallace, by then a prominent member of the merchant community, was born in Annapolis in April 1727 to John and Anne Wallace.<sup>6</sup> He began his career in the 1740s as a staymaker<sup>7</sup>, and in 1771, joined forces with Joshua Johnson and John Davidson, creating the mercantile firm of Wallace, Davidson, and Johnson. In addition to his business, Wallace involved himself in real estate and building ventures in the city. In 1771, Wallace began the construction of the third State House and provided the supplies necessary in the building's construction. Unwilling to continue to work on the building for lack of what he considered to be adequate financial compensation, Wallace resigned as principal contractor in December 1779.<sup>8</sup> Wallace died in 1812, leaving personal property appraised at $23,774.20 and extensive real estate in Anne Arundel County and Annapolis.<sup>9</sup>

PROPERTY HISTORY

Immediately following his 1769 purchase of the large tract of land between the State House and Church Street, Wallace established two streets, Fleet and Cornhill, and laid the remainder out into building lots. Upon the completion of his subdivision of Fleet and Cornhill Streets, Wallace began to sell and lease lots on his property. The property known today as 26-28-30 Fleet Street was leased to Nathaniel Adams in the early part of 1770. Nathaniel Adams, a block-maker, lived at 6-8 Fleet Street, property he had purchased in 1758.

Upon the death of Adams in the latter part of 1770, his Fleet Street property was bequeathed to his wife Grace and daughter Elizabeth.<sup>10</sup> According to the 1772 Tax Assessment, Adams' property included five tenant houses and a stable in addition to his house and the block-maker's shop. Specifically, the tax listed the property as containing:

The house that Nathaniel Adams formerly lived in with the kitchen and back sheds; being very much out of repair and having 104 panes of window broke and gone with one-half of the garden now under fence, at L30 common currency;

It further described the property:

The house and tenement of the said Adams wherein Thomas Hinks Lives, being in good repair; the house wherein Nicholas Brewer lives having the plastering a good deal broke and out of repair; the house wherein John Brewer lives, having two panes glass broke and plastering a good deal broke and out of repair; the house wherein William Hutchings now lives having 14 panes of glass broke and the paper, walls, and plastering a good deal broke and out of repair with one-half of the garden adjoining; an old block-master's shop; and an old stable.

Since Adams' property ran from Fleet Street back to Carroll's Alley (Pinkney Street) and extended 182 feet along Fleet Street, the specific locations of the various buildings have not been determined.

In 1772, Grace Adams married school-master William Hutchings. According to her dower rights, Hutchings was allotted the house which he presently leased, the block-master's shop, and the stable. These buildings were immediately leased by Hutchings to Henry Gassaway.<sup>11</sup>

The remaining portion of Adams' property, including his dwelling, was retained by his daughter, Elizabeth Adams, under the direction of her guardian, James Williams. Elizabeth Adams also continued to maintain the 99-year lease from Charles Wallace for the additional 40 feet of property that had originally been rented to her father in the early 1770s.<sup>12</sup> Williams sold the residue of the 99 year lease in 1785 for the property consisting of 26-28-30 Fleet Street to James Taylor.<sup>13</sup> By 1815, Taylor conveyed the lease to John

Hollidayoke, who sold it in 1819 to Jeremiah Hughes.<sup>14</sup> The deed of sale to Hughes indicates the property contained "the house and lot purchased from James Taylor."<sup>15</sup>

BUILDING HISTORY

Jeremiah Hughes, an influential businessman and owner of the Maryland Republican, appears to have constructed the tenements currently existing on the property designated as 26-28-30 Fleet Street by 1878.<sup>16</sup> Hughes died about 1879, bequeathing his holdings on Fleet Street to his daughter, Hannah Ann Gray. That same year, Hannah and her husband Charles F. Gray conveyed the property to Daniel Thompson for $330.00.<sup>17</sup>

The erection of these modest, flat-fronted, frame dwellings followed a model established in late 19th century Annapolis, that can also be found in sections of other southern towns and cities, such as Alexandria, and Foggy Bottom in Washington, D.C. In general, these small and almost identical dwelling forms with limited architectural detailing were clustered together in pairs, groups of threes, or even rows. They were most often erected together by a single builder and were specifically constructed as rental properties. This simple, easily built and relatively inexpensive dwelling form began to arise following the Civil War, when a substantial increase in the area's population demanded an immediate need for housing, especially for the worker classes.

<sup>15</sup> Unpublished and untitled research on Fleet Street conducted by Bryce and Phebe Jacobsen, 1970, and located at the Historic Annapolis Foundation suggests that the present building at 26 Fleet Street was actually the same structure noted in the 1819 deed of sale to Hughes. This proposition is based on deed WSG 8 Folio 94 (1822) in which Hughes sells a house and lot on Fleet Street to John Basil, providing he pay one-half of the existing lease. The house purchased by Basil is described as having a common division wall with the house owned by Hughes. The tenements at 26 and 28 Fleet Street have a common wall; however, map research indicates that the above mentioned buildings are not those currently located at 26-28 Fleet Street.

<sup>16</sup> The buildings appear on the 1878 Hopkins Map clearly indicating that they were constructed at that time; however, no assessment for Jeremiah Hughes was found in the 1876-1896 Tax Assessment records for Annapolis.

Speculative builders seized the opportunity to erect modest housing, and by repeating building forms, sharing walls, and limiting the architectural detailing, kept the cost of construction to a minimum. The erection of these houses in multiples helped to define the physical and socio-economic character of the area, and encouraged similar development of its kind. In the case of Fleet Street, for instance, the entire northwestern side of the street is lined with these types of dwellings built by various individuals as pairs or groups of threes and within the mid-to late 19th-century time frame. From the time of their erection until the late 20th century when many of the residences were renovated, they were generally occupied by extended, working-class African-American families who rented the houses from the white owners.

Within one year of purchasing the property, Thompson sold it for $300.00 to Susan B. Parodi. Susan B. Parodi, formerly Carroll, was married to Italian-born John Batties Parodi. While retaining the tenement at 26 Fleet Street, Parodi transferred 28 and 30 Fleet Street to her daughter, Magdalena in 1893.

By 1901, Magdalena conveyed both 28 and 30 Fleet Street to Ida Roget for $800.00.<sup>18</sup> Ida Roget, who previously inherited 24 Fleet Street from her mother, maintained the building as rental property. The 1910 census records indicate it was leased to African American Joseph Williams, who was employed as a barber. By 1920, the tenement was occupied by Richard Colbert, an African American laborer at the United States Naval Academy.

Ida Roget sold both 28 and 30 Fleet Street in 1921 for $1,550.00 to Jacob Blum. At the time Blum purchased the tenements, he also owned 6-8 Fleet Street (purchased in 1911), 14 Fleet Street (purchased in 1919), and 22 Fleet Street (purchased in 1925). Blum, born in Latvia in 1886, came to Annapolis where he established himself as a grocer, living and working out of 6-8 Fleet Street.<sup>19</sup> Four years after the death of Blum in 1948, his wife Fannie, together with trustee Noah Hillman, independently sold 30 Fleet Street to the present owner, Elizabeth Cook.<sup>20</sup> Prior to

These 8 structures are all practically identical, standard two bay 19th C. Annapolis residential houses. Individually they are not outstanding, however, they are important as a group and make up Fleet Street's character. Though mostly in poor shape the houses are potentially attractive (most have 6/6 and shuttered windows) and restored would make a nice 19th C. row; scale of Fleet Street should be maintained. (38 through 46 also fit this classification and add to the street as a group.)
