

CAPSULE SUMMARY
34 Fleet Street
AA-1277

The modest frame residence at 34 Fleet Street is one of a pair of attached dwellings built between 1854 and 1878 on the north side of Fleet Street. Sited on a portion of the land set aside for Governor Francis Nicholson in 1696, the pair of dwellings at 32 and 34 Fleet Street provides a representative example of the domestic rowhouse building form constructed principally as worker-class rental property in the mid-to late 19th century in Annapolis.

Located on the northeast side of the street, 34 Fleet Street is a modest, two-story, two-bay, flat-fronted frame dwelling covered with a gable roof. It is clad with a stucco finish on the first story and asphalt shingles above.

In 1854, Solomon Phillips, a local grocer, purchased the undeveloped property and constructed the two frame tenements to be used for rental purposes. Throughout their history, the two dwellings were rented to working-class African Americans.

The pair of modest, single-family dwellings at 32 and 34 Fleet Street¹ were built together between 1854 and 1878² on the north side of Fleet Street. Though both have suffered from major alterations to their original materials and treatment, the pair retains its original two-story, two-bay form and massing. The buildings are similar to other pairs and groups of attached rowhouses that make up the narrow Fleet Street.

EXTERIOR

Both dwellings are unassuming, two-bay frame structures with side entrances. A continuous gable roof, clad with asphalt shingles, extends across both dwellings, as does a boxed wood cornice. They both have flat facades and front directly onto the narrow sidewalk which separates the houses from the street. They are attached on the southeast to the group of three rowhouses at 26-28-30 Fleet Street and detached on the northwest.

The facade of 34 Fleet Street is clad on the first story with a stucco finish, and on the second story with asbestos shingles. The first story features a side entrance and window. The entry, reached by a concrete stoop with concrete block walls, is filled with a wood panelled replacement door with six-lights in the upper panel and a metal screen door in front. A 1/1 replacement window is located to the side of the door. Two 1/1 windows are located in the second story. The entry has square-edged wood surrounds, while all of the windows are set within central-reeded surrounds. The window openings have been decreased in size, making them shorter than originally constructed. The asbestos shingles on the second story conceal this alteration, while it is clearly visible in the stucco of the first story.

The northwest side elevation, fronting on the passage, is similiarly clad in stucco on the first story and asbestos shingles

¹ The buildings were historically designated 13 and 14 on the 1885 Sanborn Map and 18 and 20 on the 1891 and 1897 Sanborn Maps.

² The date of construction is based upon archival findings: the lot on which the pair of dwellings stand was sold unimproved in 1854, while an 1878 deed of partition indicates that the pair of dwellings had been erected. Further, the buildings appear on the 1878 Hopkins Map. This side of Fleet Street is too difficult to see on the 1858 Sachse Bird's Eye View of Annapolis to make any determination of existence at that time.

The pair of dwellings at 32-34 Fleet Street, constructed between 1854 and 1878, are typical examples of the domestic rowhouse building form constructed principally as worker-class rental property in Annapolis. One of two dwellings constructed on Fleet Street by Solomon Phillips, the residence served as rental property throughout most of its history. Currently well-maintained, the building contributes to the historical and cultural understanding of the development of the city's working class environment in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

SITE HISTORY

The land on which 34 Fleet Street stands was originally a portion of the land surveyed and set aside for Governor Francis Nicholson in 1696. Nicholson, influential in the town planning of Annapolis, directed that the newly established town of Annapolis be "surveyed and laid out in the most commodious and convenient parte of the said Towne six acres of Land intire for the erecting a Court House and other buildings as shall thought be necessary and convenient."³ The land located to the south of the State House, encompassed by State Circle, Main, Francis, and East Streets, was specifically set aside for Nicholson, who intended to use the property for a garden, vineyard, and site of a summer house.⁴ In 1699, Francis Nicholson left Maryland to serve as the Governor of Virginia, but retained part of his Annapolis properties until his death in 1728.

In 1704 following the destruction of Annapolis land records, a portion of the Nicholson land was claimed by Thomas Bordley.⁵ In 1769, Charles Wallace purchased a large tract of this land, which stretched from the foot of Church Street up to State House Circle. Charles Wallace, by then a prominent member of the merchant community, was born in Annapolis in April 1727 to John and Anne Wallace.⁶ He began his career in the 1740s as a staymaker⁷, and in 1771, joined forces with Joshua Johnson and John Davidson, creating the mercantile firm of Wallace, Davidson, and Johnson. In addition to his business, Wallace involved himself in real estate and building ventures in the city. In 1771, Wallace began the construction of the third State House and provided the supplies necessary in the building's construction. Unwilling to continue to work on the building for lack of what he considered to be adequate financial compensation, Wallace resigned as principal contractor in December 1779.⁸ Wallace died in 1812, leaving personal property appraised at $23,774.20 and extensive real estate in Annapolis and Anne Arundel County.⁹

PROPERTY HISTORY

Immediately following his 1769 purchase of the large tract of land between the State House and Church Street, Wallace established two streets, Fleet and Cornhill, and laid the remainder out into building lots. Upon the completion of his subdivision of Fleet and Cornhill Streets, Wallace began to sell and lease lots on his property.

The property known today as 32-34-36 Fleet Street was leased to James Maw in the early part of 1771. James Maw, a carpenter, leased the property for 99 years for L15 per year. Although Maw retained the leases, the property, "with houses" was sold by Wallace to Charles Carroll for L10 in 1772. Charles Carroll (1737-1830) was a prominent member of the Continental Congress, signer of the Declaration of Independence, state senator, and congressman.¹⁰

An inventory of Maw's estate, dating from 1777, indicates that he was in the possession of two tenements located on Lot 87, fronting on Pinkney Street: one house leased from Wallace on Cornhill Street; two tenements and one house leased from Carroll on Fleet Street. Following the death of Maw in 1777, the property was maintained by his wife, Judith Doyle, until 1784, when she sold the residue of the Carroll leases to John Crisall for L500. When Crisall died in circa 1788, Carroll conveyed the remaining 88 years of the lease to John Davidson and R.P. Davis. Eleanor Davidson, the widow of John Davidson, sold the lease back to Carroll following the death of both Davidson and Davis in 1798.

In 1830, Charles Carroll sold the lots fronting on Fleet and Pinkney streets to Samuel Parrott for $175. Following the death of Parrott in 1845, his widow Eleanor married Philip Whitwright. Since the estate of Parrott contained houses on Pinkney and Fleet streets that were out of repair with occupants unable to pay rents, the property was listed as "unproductive and subject to taxes." Equity Case 11733, Whitwright versus Parrott, appointed Alexander B. Hagner trustee to devise the property by 1850.

BUILDING HISTORY

On January 17, 1854, Solomon Phillips purchased the vacant lots fronting on Fleet Street for $91.00. Designated today as 32-34 Fleet Street, the land was improved by Phillips, who constructed two 2-story frame tenements between the years 1854 and 1878. Solomon Phillips was born about 1819 and worked as a grocer.¹¹ When Phillips died in 1870, his estate was divided between his daughter, Mary Bigelow, and his niece, Amanda Payne. In 1878, a deed of partition was executed, granting Mary Bigelow 51 Pinkney, 32-34 and 48-50 Fleet Streets.¹²

The erection of these modest, flat-fronted, frame dwellings followed a model established in late 19th century Annapolis, that can also be found in sections of other southern towns and cities, such as Alexandria, and Foggy Bottom in Washington, D.C. In general, these small and almost identical dwelling forms with limited architectural detailing were clustered together in pairs, groups of threes, or even rows. They were most often erected together by a single builder and were specifically constructed as rental properties. This simple, easily built and relatively inexpensive dwelling form began to arise following the Civil War, when a substantial increase in the area's population demanded an immediate need for housing, especially for the working classes. Speculative builders seized the opportunity to erect modest housing, and by repeating building forms, sharing walls, and limiting the architectural detailing, kept the cost of construction to a minimum. The erection of these houses in multiples helped to define the physical and socio-economic character of the area, and encouraged similar development of its kind. In the case of Fleet Street, the entire northwestern side of the street is lined with these types of dwellings built by various individuals as pairs or groups of threes within the mid-to late 19th century time frame. From the time of their erection until the late 20th century when many of the residences were renovated, they were generally occupied by extended, working-class African-American families who rented the houses from the white owners.

Waldo Orville Bigelow, the husband of Mary, was originally from South Framingham, Massachusetts. After serving in the Civil War as a Major, Bigelow was appointed postmaster of the City of Annapolis, serving from 1869 to 1880.¹³ Near the end of his term as postmaster, he became delinquent in his accounts. His estate was placed in equity and auctioned for sale. Frank Stockett and John Randall were appointed trustees, selling the 34 Fleet Street to Jane Prout by 1885 for $361.00.¹⁴

Prout retained the property until 1892, selling it for $250.00 to Joseph W. Trautwein, who in 1910 purchased 32 Fleet Street.¹⁵ Joseph William Trautwein, born in Baltimore in 1864, established and operated a successful ship chandlery and hardware business in Annapolis.¹⁶ By 1926, Joseph Trautwein owned the hardware store at 136 Dock Street which sold everything from groceries to gasoline.¹⁷ In addition to his business, Trautwein appears to have been involved in local real estate investments. In 1901, he purchased a single-family dwelling at 116 Conduit Street and, in 1914 bought the house and property at 134 Conduit Street, both for rental purposes. Trautwein actually lived with his family at 132 Conduit Street which he bought in 1891.¹⁸

According to the census records, 34 Fleet Street was leased in 1900 by Trautwein to Susan Wright, an African American. In 1910, it was occupied by Cecelia Little, who worked in a local shop. The census records for 1920 show that African-American Eva Dennis and her family lived at 34 Fleet Street.

In 1928, Trautwein sold 32-34 Fleet Street to Harry Ivrey, who later purchased 49 Fleet Street. Ivrey, born in Poland in 1889, was a grocer on Compromise Street. Charles Dennis obtained ownership of the buildings in 1930. When Dennis died, sometime prior to 1951, his estate was divided between his daughters, Ellen Dennis Haste and Geneva Dennis. The building known today as 32 Fleet Street was transferred to Geneva Dennis, while 34 Fleet Street went to Ellen Dennis Haste. After the deaths of both Ellen and Walter Haste, 34 Fleet Street was owned by Louise Hall. In one year, Hall conveyed it to Dorothy E. Hubbard, who sold it in 1982 to Gerard S. Lamkin. By 1988, Lamkin sold 34 Fleet Street to Paschal and Mary Lapadula, who currently maintain it as rental property.

¹⁷ An historic photograph of the J.W. Trautwein Store can be found in Mame Warren's Then Again...Annapolis, 1900-1965, p. 67.
