DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Summer Hill, located on the south side of Maryland Route 214, three quarters of a mile west of Davidsonville, is a two story, plus attic, frame dwelling, five bays wide and two deep. To the east is a two story wing, two bays wide and two deep. The windows in both sections have six over six lights. On the main block the top edges of the five second story windows are even with the lower edge of the fascia boards. The scrolled brackets of the cornice fill the soffit and extend to within a few inches of the bottom edge of the fascia. The same brackets continue along the barge and return. A similar treatment occurs on the wing although the brackets are not as elaborate. The entire house sits on a brick foundation of common bond, six courses of stretchers to each course of headers. The center double door on the north facade of the main block has three panels in each door and is flanked by narrow vertical windows of four lights over a vertical wood panel. Surmounting the door and side-lights is a six light rectangular transom. The south door in the central hall has six panels and is surmounted by a three light transom. Between the second and third bays from the west a chimney pierces the metal roof on the north and another on the south sides. A third chimney pierces the north side near the peak at the east end. The kitchen wing also has an inside end chimney on the east.

In the central hall is a stairway that rises to the third floor attic. It has a heavy round newel and three heavy turned balusters per tread. The scrolled decoration on the step ends continues along the second and third floor landings. West of the central hall are two parlors connected by large, panelled, sliding doors. Each room has an interior fireplace with a projecting chimneybreast with beaded edges. The grey marble fireplaces are early victorian in style, each with a round-arch opening, panelled spandrels, and a curved mantelshelf supported in the center by a large console. The door frames are molded as are the window frames. Each window also has a single horizontal panel beneath it.

The northeast room, on the other side of the stair hall, has a nearly identical fireplace, in black marble, with a shield-shaped plaque in place of the center console. The three fireplaces on the second floor are also marble, but very plain, with rectangular openings.

The east wing may predate the main block. On the first floor are one room and a stair hall with one chamber above. The stairs are steep, with rectangular balusters and a ramped handrail. The six-panelled doors in this section appear to be of older construction than those in the main block. The vertical and horizontal rails are joined with pegged, mortise-and-tenon joints and have metal, box locks. One door, in addition to the metal lock, also has a wood, box lock. In the cellar under this wing is a sealed fireplace on the east wall. The chimney rises through the two rooms above and emerges as an inside end chimney.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Summer Hill is a typical Maryland farmhouse of the mid-nineteenth century. The exterior is in transition between mid-nineteenth century style, broadly derived from the Greek Revival, and an earlier style derived from Federal-Georgian sources. The interior detailing especially the marble mantle pieces and heavy woodwork place the house definitely in the mid-century. The retardataire appearance of the exterior typifies the reluctance of southern Marylanders to erect structures following the most recent architectural styles. On the interior, however, local builders felt free to use the most contemporary ornament.

The tract of land on which Summer Hill stands was involved in an unusually high number of Chancery cases in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries, contributing to the development of Maryland real property law. In an 1849 decree the court ordered the division and sale of the property of John Beard, to settle his estate; 65 1/2 acres (that portion which had been assigned to the widow, Harriet A. Beard, as dower) was sold to James I. Gray, the probable builder of Summer Hill.¹

Summer Hill stands on part of a 1260 acre tract of land surveyed for Richard Beard in 1663 and known as "Beard's Habitation." A 1698 Act of the Assembly defining the Anne Arundel-Baltimore County boundary referred to "Beard's Mill," and Richard Beard represented Anne Arundel County in the Assemblies of 1662 and 1663. Beard was the brother-in-law of William Burgess, a merchant whose vessels brought English settlers to Virginia.
