DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This "telescope" from brick and frame house was built in several stages from 1735 to about 1840.

The earliest section is brick and contains the kitchen of the present house. A brick in the outside chimney wall bears the initials WA and the date 1735 which were pressed into the clay before firing. The interior of the kitchen has been altered through the years to such a degree that nothing remains to indicate its original appearance. It is interesting to note that the 12' ceiling level (which could not be changed easily) is unusually high for an 18th century house. The original wooden lintel over the fireplace can be seen from a closet and its height indicates that the opening was at one time much larger.

under the stair

The low room above the kitchen, now divided by a partition into a bath and a hall, still contains the original flooring. The chimney wall is panelled, with an arched opening for a tiny fireplace, and a door on either side of it.

A full basement with walls built of iron pyrite field stones dates from the same period as the kitchen. The fact that it extends clear to the far wall of the 1840 house leads to the conclusion that the kitchen is only part of the original house. For some reason the remainder was torn down and the much larger 3 story brick "townhouse" built over its foundations.

The main house, 1840, has a typical side-hall, double-parlor plan. The hall has a "front" and a "garden" entrance and is divided below the stair landing by a pair of shutter doors. The wide, graceful, stair with a walnut bannister and beautiful round spindles of curly maple is open up to the third floor. The mantels in the living-room and dining-room are black marble. The door and window trim is the square corner design with medallions. The flooring is random width pine.

The kitchen is reached through a door under the stair landing.

A frame addition was built on the opposite end of the kitchen after 1850. It also has a low room above.

The exterior of the frame section is board and batten, the kitchen is laid in flemish bond with glazed brick headers and the main house has common bond walls.

The house is almost hidden by immense hemlocks and magnolias and the garden contains thick hedges of American Boxwood.

The house was owned by the Sellman family until 1920 and they may have been the first patentees of the land.
