The building known as 2 Madison Place exists as the two-story shed-roofed rear wing of 206 West Street. Of frame construction sheathed in six-course common bond brick, the wing is three irregularly spaced bays long, with entrances in the outer bays and a window between. All three of these openings are topped with segmental arched soldier course brick lintels. The shorter second floor windows, placed above the first floor openings, are topped with jack arches. These windows were all of 6/6 sash in 1982 photos, but are now 2/2. The north facade of the wing is two bays wide. The second floor 2/2 sash windows match those on the west facade's second floor. On the first floor, a window in the west bay and a doorway in the east have no brick lintels. In 1982 photographs, the east bay was covered by a one-story, one-bay shed-roofed frame addition, since removed. The windows on this facade have also been altered from 6/6 to 2/2. A one-story concrete-block addition covers the first floor of the east facade of the wing. The roof is covered with standing-seam metal.

The buildings at 202-206 West Street were constructed for speculative developer John H. White as rental housing in 1899. The wood frame structure, clad in brick, consisted of a row of five dwellings anchored by a grocery at the corner of West Street and Madison Place. The rear wing of this grocery, used as a residence, is the property known as 2 Madison Place. A row of attached one-story wood frame garages originally stood at the rear of the property, but were razed by 1954.
