Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The early 19th century house known as Velmeade II is located on Patuxent River Road between Central Avenue and Mt. Airy Road in Davidsonville. The house site is approximately 1,000 feet east of the road and faces west. The house is in dilapidated condition and condemnation proceedings were in process at the time of the survey. In 1982 the house burned, causing extensive damage. At the time of the fire the house was being completely remodeled by the present owners. Because of the extreme damage, many of the original features which had been concealed by remodeling could be observed.

The house consists of an original section which is a typical two-and-one-half story, early 19th century side passage plan type. A screened porch was later added on the south end; in the 1970's two additions of two-and-one-half stories and a single story were added on the north end. These additions effectively doubled the size of the original structure. The original exterior weatherboards are covered with vinyl siding, and the windows have been replaced. Stucco was added to the original brick pier and wooden beam foundation. A small basement area was dug under the southeast corner of the original structure to accommodate modern heating and water equipment. The gabled roof has asphalt shingles.

The west or front facade of the original structure has three bays on the first floor. The front doorway is on the right side with two window openings to the left of it. Although almost all of the windows are missing, it appears they were double-hung sash, six-over-six, unless otherwise noted. The four-panel front door with fan-shaped panes at the top is not original. On the second floor are three windows directly above those on the first floor.

Two exterior brick chimneys with simple corbeled caps are symmetrically placed on the north gable facade. A two-and-one-half story frame addition now extends from this end of the house, encompassing the early chimneys.

The east or rear facade of the original section has three bays on the first floor. In the center and to the right are two window openings. To the left is a smaller window where a doorway was originally located. Between the small window and the center window is a new exterior concrete block flue chimney. On the second floor are three bays. Two windows are located directly above the center and right windows on the first floor. Above the small first floor window is another window opening on the second floor. This is not level with the other two because it is located at the interior stair landing.

On the gabled south facade of the original section are two windows which are not parallel. The one on the right is lower and is located above the stairs. The one on the left is in a second floor chamber. Centered in the gable is a double window in the attic. Attached to this end of the house is a one-story gabled, screened porch. Inside the porch at the southwest corner is a doorway from the original section to the porch. It does not appear to have been a recent addition. Adjacent to the porch at the southwest corner are stairs to the basement.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The original section of Velmeade II is a two-story, three bay frame house with a side passage, double parlor plan. This house type is found in significant numbers throughout the Tidewater region from the late 18th century until the Civil War period. Velmeade II is a relatively large and well built example, and probably dates to the mid-19th century. The house was enlarged in recent years by a two story addition, a smaller one story wing, and a screened porch. Additional remodeling had concealed much of the early fabric of the house. In 1982 the house was gutted by fire and has subsequently been condemned.

The gabled roof of the two-and-one-half story addition on the north end of the original section is approximately one foot lower than the original roof. Tele-scoping from the north end of the addition is a one story, one room addition with gable roof.

Although the interior plan of the house has been altered, it is evident that the original section was a typical side passage plan with a stair passage and two large rooms on the first floor, a passage and three chambers on the second floor, and a single room in the attic. The wall between the original passage and the west parlor was removed and the front door now opens into the parlor. A wall was added at the base of the stairs and it now divides the original entry hall laterally in half. The original rear door at the east end of the entry-hall was replaced with a window. This end of the entry-hall under the stairs was enclosed and converted into a bath.

The majority of the original plaster walls were removed and replaced with dry wall; riven laths were observed, however. The original floor was random-width boards but narrow oak flooring was laid over it. No original interior doors were found. The original trim, moulding and baseboards were either removed or burned.

In the west wall of the west parlor are the front door and two windows. On the north wall is a rebuilt fireplace. The simple wooden mantel was removed from the chimney but is still lying in the room. On each side are tapered, rounded pilasters. The mantel shelf is missing. The fascia is carved and rounded; the surround has decorative carved trim. In the east wall is a double doorway opening into the other parlor. As stated previously, the wall between the west parlor and the entry hall was removed, making the original entry hall part of the parlor. A new section of wall was added to extend the east wall of the parlor to the exterior south wall. The doorway in this new section leads to the remainder of the original entry hall and stairs. An exterior doorway to the porch was constructed in the southwest corner of the parlor's south wall.

A second parlor is located to the east of the front parlor. In the northwest corner of the north wall is a doorway to the addition. To the right of the doorway is a rebuilt fireplace with exposed brick. No mantel was in place. In the east wall are two windows. In the south wall is an original doorway to the entry-hall, but it had been covered.

Because the added wall section butts the bottom landing of the stairs, there is one step up to the landing and a 90 degree turn to the left before the stairs rise along the south wall of the entry-hall to an intermediate landing. They make a 180 degree turn and three steps continue to the second floor. The design of the stairway is identical to the one in Velmeade I, which is also located on Patuxent River Road. The plain open stringer has a small plain moulding on the side. The balustrade continues up to the second floor and is carried around the stairwell to the south wall. There are two thin rectangular balusters per riser; the rail is rounded. The finial post is tapered and rounded and sits on a rectangular plinth block. A similar post is at the landing.

The second floor and attic were viewed only from the stairs; because of the condition of the structure, it was deemed unsafe for the survey team to go any further.

#7. Continuation sheet, page 3.

There are four rooms on the second floor: a small one above the entry hall, another above each parlor, and a bath. Each has a fireplace which had been covered with drywall. The stairs leading to the attic rise against the south wall. Originally they were open-string but are now enclosed. The balustrade is of the same design as the first floor. The attic is a finished room.

The first floor of the two-and-one-half story addition consists of a kitchen on the front and a laundry room at the rear. On the second floor is one large room, probably the master bedroom. The one story garage was converted into a family room which can be reached from the kitchen.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Velmead is marked on the 1860 and 1878 county maps as owned by the heirs of James H. Watkins and by Jno. H. Jones respectively.

The house is frame, 2 stories high with an A-roof. It has had several additions and alterations in recent years. The oldest part of the house appears to be the souther-most of the two 2-story sections. It has the traditional, double-parlor, side-hall plan of mid-19th century houses in the area. A slightly lower, 2-story, wing has been added to the north end of the house, enclosing the original exterior, brick chimneys. The siding, shutters and roofing of the older section of the house appear to be contemporary with this addtion.
