Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

One of the largest buildings at Curtis Bay, the original section of which was 12 bays long, the Fabricating Shop has been surrounded on three sides to form a large rectangularly shaped building composed of a one-story rectangle surrounded by a two-story "U" shaped structure. Few, if any, original openings are intact. Ghosts and concrete window heads indicate former window locations. New windows are the standard fixed over awning metal window combination that is used throughout the Yard as replacement windows. This facade has four personnel doors, a large roll-up metal door, and a flat roofed addition with chain link walls that protects mechanical equipment. Each end of this original building has had a large metal shed that is two stories high added onto it. These additions are clad in vertical metal siding and have several large roll-up metal door openings at grade. The larger addition to the rear is a two-story addition with a slightly sloping roof. The second story has five windows on either side of a metal ladder which leads to the upper roof. These windows have been boarded over with plywood.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

This property is associated with the development of the Coast Guard Yard at Curtis Bay. The Yard was first established on this site in 1899 as a boat repair and construction facility for the Revenue Cutter Service, the forerunner of the present-day Coast Guard. At that time, the facility was known as the Revenue Cutter Service Depot, and generally served vessels stationed in the mid-Atlantic area.

The establishment of the Depot was related to the emphasis on Naval preparedness that took place following the Spanish American war. Prior to the establishment of the Depot, vessel repair and construction were handled by private concerns. Starting as a collection of a few frame buildings, the Depot, after 1940 known as the Yard, expanded as its mission and capabilities increased. The Yard was at its productive peak and greatest size during World War II, with most surviving historic structures dating to that time.

This building was constructed in 1943 and housed the fabricating shop, where ship parts were designed, worked, and assembled.

This resource is not included in the proposed National Register Historic District.

Building #78 is not included in the proposed historic district. Massive out-of-scale additions leave the original and historic section of this building undiscernable.

Criterion A—Historical Associations

The original portion of this building was constructed during World War II and is associated with the major rebuild, expansion and modernization effort that took place at that time.

Criterion C—Design Significance

The historic core of this building is typical in both design and construction methods of utilitarian/ industrial buildings of this period.

Integrity

Massive alterations render this building unable to communicate its historic associations and architectural significance.
