Whitehall Overseer's Quarters AA-326 A

Before being converted into a carport, this log structure had a large central chimney and was partitioned into two separate rooms, each with its own front entrance. The house presumably served as a duplex for slave families.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This log duplex has been extensively modified. It has been converted into a two car carport, sheathed with wood shingles, and had its roof raised about two feet. Furthermore, the flooring downstairs and the partition that separated the two rooms have been removed. It does, however, convey the division of space in a duplex, and is similar in this regard to the duplex at East St. Mary's Manor in St. Mary's County.

The length of the house runs south to north; the front faces east. Originally a brick chimney stood in the center of the interior (as at East St. Mary's Manor) with fireboxes opening into each room. A plank partition on either sides of the chimney divided the rooms. A stairway, larger than those found in most slave cabins, ascended the gable wall on each side. The bottom landing indicates the presence of the former floor, which was laid about a foot above the ground. Each room had a window that opened to the west on the ground floor.

The houses measures c. 30' x c. 15' each room having been c. 15' x 15'.

In the upstairs a window was cut into each gable room. Unlike the duplex at East St. Mary's Manor, there is no partition dividing the upstairs chamber into two rooms, but this partition may well have been removed when the occupants moved out and the upstairs converted for storage use. The original roof was removed and the rafters replaced with those from different structures.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Mrs. Ruth Taylor now resides in the nearby "overseer's house." According to her, that house was built in the second quarter of the 19th century and later inhabited by her great grandfather, who moved there as a young man from Whitehall, the main house of the plantation and the residence of his father. This log duplex may have been built at that time, or earlier, and occupied by the field hands or by house servants of the overseers. Mrs. Taylor remembered no other houses nearby that may have constituted a slave quarter of which this dwelling would have been a part. Since the structure has been extensively altered, there remains no evidence that permits a definite date of construction to be suggested. The stairs, which appear to be original, suggest a date of the second quarter of the 19th century.

The main house, White Hall, of the plantation on which the overseer's house and building were located, is on the National Register.
