

CAPSULE SUMMARY
Isaac N. Morehouse House (AA-390)
119 Charles Street
Annapolis, Maryland

The single building at 119 Charles Street was constructed in 1878 by carpenter Isaac N. Morehouse of New York. The first of five dwellings erected by Morehouse on Charles Street, the building was originally a single-family dwelling depicting the fashionable Second Empire style of the Victorian era. The exterior of the building was altered in the 20th century by the removal of its original full-width balcony, which was replaced by a front porch with half-hipped roof. This work was undertaken by William F. Childs, whose family owned and occupied the building for over sixty years. On the interior, in 1979, the structure was divided to create two separate dwellings by Princess Construction Corporation of Washington, DC. With this extensive renovation, the dwellings were termed condominiums and sold separately. The building at 119 Charles Street represents the work of builder Morehouse on property historically associated with George Wells and the Adams-Kilty House at 131-133 Charles Street.

The building at 119 Charles Street is a wood frame structure set upon a parged brick foundation. From the exterior, the building reads as a single dwelling, having been largely restored in the latter part of the 20th century to its original Victorian era design. Yet, the interior was significantly altered in 1979 to provide two single-family dwellings, a rehabilitation that resulted in the loss of all original features. The building is two-stories in height with an English basement and mansard roof. The parged foundation is pierced by standard-size 2/2 windows, four on the facade and one on the northeast elevation. The stucco is scored on the northeast elevation. The wood frame structure above is clad in German siding with corner boards. Originally clad in German siding, the structure was sheathed in square-butt wood shingles by 1913. The bell-cast mansard roof is clad with wood shingles, and obscures the shallow pitch of the side gable roof of the main block.

Constructed as a single-family dwelling in 1878 by carpenter Isaac Morehouse, the building at 119 Charles Street is a wood frame structure set upon a parged brick foundation. From the exterior, the building reads as a single dwelling, having been largely restored in the latter part of the 20th century to its original Victorian era design. Yet, the interior was significantly altered in 1979 to provide two single-family dwellings, a rehabilitation that resulted in the loss of all original features.

The building is two-stories in height with an English basement and mansard roof. The parged foundation is pierced by standard-size 2/2 windows, four on the facade and one on the northeast elevation. The stucco is scored on the northeast elevation. The wood frame structure above is clad in German siding with corner boards. Originally clad in German siding, the structure was sheathed in square-butt wood shingles by 1913. The original cladding material was replaced by the late 1970s. The bell-cast, or concave, mansard roof is clad with square-butt wood shingles, and obscures the shallow pitch of the side gable roof covering the main block of the building. Two interior end chimneys of metal replace the original parged brick chimneys.

The large rectangular parcel on which the building stands also contains the 1965 dwelling at 121 Charles Street. The two buildings are divided by a poured concrete driveway that provides access to the rear of the property. A one-story wood frame shed is located in the west corner of the lot. The small front yard is bordered by a wood fence with square posts and ball caps. The fence is a continuation of the balustrade on the straight-flight stair to the main entry of the building. The stair and fence were constructed in 1979.

Exterior

The facade of the building, facing southeast on Charles Street, is five bays wide with a central entry. The English basement has a central entry flanked on each side by two 2/2 windows with square-edged surrounds and wood sills. The entry holds an Italianate style door of wood with heavily molded semi-circular arched panels. It is framed by three-light sidelights set over recessed panels. Like the window openings, the entry has wide square-edged surrounds and a wood sill. The second story of the facade has a central entry also symmetrically flanked by two window openings on each side. The elongated windows have 2/2 sash, square-edged casings with brackets, wood sills, louvered shutters, and pedimented lintels with ogee caps. The wide entry is similarly framed with a pedimented lintel and square-edged casings with a bracket motif at the top. The opening contains a four-light fixed transom, three-light sidelights with recessed panels, and Italianate style door with raised molding. The pedimented lintels of the first story openings are set within the frieze of the entablature. Restored in the latter part of the 20th century, the entablature consists of a wide scalloped frieze, scrolled and paired modillions and brackets, and an overhanging ogee-molded cornice visually supporting the mansard roof. Finished with corner boards, the bell-cast mansard roof is pierced with five symmetrically placed dormers. The segmentally arched dormers have 2/2 windows, wood sills, square-edged casings, and are clad with wood shingles. The top of the mansard is finished by a cornice with an ogee profile.

The northeast elevation, because of the 1979 alterations, has only one opening now and it is in the foundation wall. The opening holds a 1/1 replacement window framed by square-edged casings. The exposed portions of the southwest elevation also lacks openings. This wall, abutting the contemporary dwelling at 117 Charles Street, was clad with weatherboard in 1979.

By 1897, a full-width rear porch was constructed on the building by original owner, Isaac Morehouse. This two-story porch was subsequently altered, and enclosed with German siding and casement metal windows. The foundation of the porch, set upon brick piers, was infilled in 1979 to provide additional living space. The infill is constructed of concrete block with paired casement windows each with a single light. The first story of the altered porch is reached by two sets of wood steps leading to a shared wood deck. Divided at the center by a partial wall, the deck is supported by wood posts and has square balusters. The first story of the porch is now pierced on the northeast side by a pair of metal casement windows with a single-light fixed window above. Presently like a transom, the fixed rectangular window is not set within the same opening as the casement window. The northwest elevation of the porch now has two rows of three casement windows with single lights topped by fixed windows. The elongated metal windows flank the two sliding doors at the center of the elevation. These entries are set beside fixed window openings that attempt to continue the symmetry of the elevation. Additionally, they are capped by fixed rectangular windows.

The second story of the former porch has as half-hipped roof that connects into the main block of the building and is framed by the bell-cast sides of the roof. Screened, the second story has wood balusters, mullions between each pair of the openings, and an overhanging ogee-molded cornice. The open porch as been secured at 119B Charles Street by 1/1 storm windows on the interior.

Interior: 119A Charles Street

The 1979 renovation resulted in two single-family dwellings that are identically detailed with modern components. Running through the center of the building, a concrete block wall was installed that supports two quarter-flight stairs on each side. Upon entering the building from Charles Street, a vestibule was created with doors to the left and right. The six-paneled wood doors provided direct access to the separate dwellings. Each unit consists on the first floor of two rooms, specifically a living room and kitchen. Pierced by a narrow entry, the wall between the living room and kitchen is stepped at the top and sides. Although the wall historically had a larger opening, the stepped recess appears to be too wide to have been the originally opening between the two spaces. The kitchen, with its modern appliances, is divided by a half-wall that represents the original rear elevation of the main block. The basement level and second floor each have two rooms and a bath. Access to the basement is located under the main stair in the kitchen.

the floors are carpeted and the walls finished with four-inch high baseboards with ovolo caps. While the narrow opening between the living room and kitchen has no casings, the remaining openings have narrow stepped architraves. The quarter-flight stair is carpeted with an ovolo-profiled wall stringer. The enclosed stringer of the carriage is finished with turned balusters and a round newel with square and call cap. A rail has been applied to the wall for additional support. The drywall ceiling is framed with a Colonial Revival style crown molding featuring bead and reel motifs, as well as acanthus and tongue detailing.

In the living room, on the southwest wall, is the projecting chimney breast. Having lost its original brick chimney stack above the roofline, the chimney is finished with the only original detail identified on the interior of the building. The original mantel is Victorian in design detailed by Tuscan pilasters with raised shafts, a square fireplace opening with slate tiles, raised segmental panels flanked by raised medallions. The narrow shelf of the mantel has a detailed bedmolding and torus profile.

The interior of 119B Charles Street was not surveyed.

The building at 119 Charles Street represents the work of builder Morehouse on property historically associated with George Wells and the Adams-Kilty House at 131-133 Charles Street (AA-393).

Site History: Lot 53

The property on which the dwellings at 119 Charles Street now stand was historically owned and surveyed in 1718 for William Gresham. Residing in Kent County, Gresham owned Lots 52, 53, and 55 along Charles Street in Annapolis. By 1772, the property was conveyed to planter William Adams of Somerset County in two separate deeds of sale dating from December 1772 and May 1773. Chancery Records document that Thomas Gresham, then owner of the lots, died prior to the completion of the sales. Consequently, the conveyance was not decreed until November 1789.

Documentary evidence indicates that the property remained unimproved through most of the 18th century, particularly while under the ownership of the Gresham family. A lease made by Adams to Thomas Brooke Hodgkins of Annapolis documents that a building did stand on the property by 1786, when the twelve year lease was filed. Denoted now as 131-133 Charles Street, documentary and physical evidence suggests the building was erected by William Adams sometime between 1772 and 1786. Hodgkins' lease of 1786 required that he "put interior and exterior of house in good repair, erect a fence around the property, put in a water pump, build a meat house, carriage house, and stable, and enclose sufficient portion of a garden."<sup>1</sup>

With the death of Adams in 1795, title was devised to his wife and children. Adams' brother, however, contested the will, prompting the court to order the entire parcel to be sold. In 1797, all three lots plus the brick dwelling were assessed at 1125 pounds. One year later, with the estate still unsettled, the property was re-evaluated at 900 pounds. While the estate was being reviewed, General John Davidson occupied the dwelling, and later served as trustee for the sale of the property.

On November 14, 1799, William Kilty purchased the land with its improvements for 775 pounds. Kilty, who later served as Chancellor of Maryland, lived in the dwelling for nineteen years. By 1818, Kilty had conveyed the three lots to Francis Hollingsworth for $3,150. Hollingsworth, in turn, sold Lots 52 and 53 to Thomas H. Bowie. Bowie died prior to the completion of the sale and the courts appointed title back to Hollingsworth. In 1824, Hollingsworth sold the two lots along with the building at 131-133 Charles Street to George Wells for $3,025.

Born in 1800, George Wells, Jr. was a prominent citizen of Annapolis, serving as president of the Farmers National Bank and the Maryland Senate, as well as manager of the Annapolis & Elk Ridge Railroad. Wells had begun purchasing property, both improved and undeveloped, throughout Annapolis in the 1820s. By the 1840s, Wells had accumulated all of the parcels fronting Charles Street, which included the Adams-Kilty House at 133 Charles Street and the Jonas Green House at 124 Charles Street.

By the third quarter of the 19th century, Wells had overextended himself financially. Consequently, he mortgaged his landholdings to the Farmers Bank of Maryland in 1877. Wells immediately defaulted on the loans and was forced to sell his property on Charles Street, Duke of Gloucester Street, Market Street, South Street, Cathedral Street, Carroll Street, North West Street, and Bladens Street. Alexander Randall was appointed trustee of the estate, and charged with overseeing the subdivision and sale of the land. The property along Charles Street, which included Parcels 28, 30, 31, and 32, was subdivided to create 25 individual lots to be sold at public auction. The sale, completed by 1881, yielded $16,563 for Wells to pay his creditors. Lot 53 in Parcel 30 was divided into eight smaller plots, which were sold individually.

Building History

The portion of the plot where the building at 119 Charles Street was later erected was purchased by carpenter Isaac Newton Morehouse for $2.55 a foot in 1878. The sale was listed at $102 for thirty feet of unimproved property fronting Charles Street. Morehouse was charged in 1878 with a frame house ($1000), a frame carpenter's shop ($50), and one lot ($172). At the rear of the property, behind the dwelling at 119 Charles Street, Morehouse maintained a one-story carpenter's shop. The stone building with a one-story wood frame garage on the rear, was constructed months prior to the erection of the dwelling in 1878. The census records for 1880 show that Isaac and Ellen Morehouse occupied the dwelling at 119 Charles Street. Morehouse and his wife were originally from New York, born in 1818 and 1824, respectively. Just after the erection of 119 Charles Street, Morehouse built a modest single-family dwelling at 117 Charles Street. By 1891, Morehouse erected the dwelling at 115 Charles Street on the southwest elevation of 117 Charles Street. In addition, the carpenter constructed the pair of dwellings at 111-113 Charles Street.

The dwelling Morehouse erected at 119 Charles Street was rectangular in form with fashionable Victorian era detailing. The two-story building, set upon an English basement, was augmented by a full-width front porch. Physical evidence noted by Annapolis architect Charles Bohl suggests the structure was constructed in two phases, and ultimately not completed upon the death of builder Morehouse in 1899. The evidence, no longer visible, contends the "front half of the house seems to have been built first. The front first floor wall and foundation are tabby, a formed and poured in place concrete using oyster shells as the concrete aggregate. The two front second floor rooms and the entrance hall have elaborate plaster cove moldings not found in other rooms. There is a 'seam' in the German siding on the north side with paint markings of a corner board trim, suggesting that at one time that was the outside corner of the house. There exists now two separate roofs: a straight shed draining to the rear, over which a gabled roof was built to the peak of the bell cast mansard, draining both front and rear."<sup>2</sup> If the structure was constructed in two phases, the work was completed prior to 1885, as the Sanborn Fire Insurance Maps depict the building has having a constant form from 1885 to 1954.

Bohl also notes "the north elevation had four 'false' windows; trim and closed shutters identical to the front second floor windows were applied directly over the German siding. Paint outlines on the siding testify to this, as do paint outlines on the front elevation testify to the presence of two newel posts of American Victorian design. Located on the second floor front near the corner boards, these newel posts received the hand rail for a balcony. The balcony received a flight of stairs from the street, as the second floor was the main living and socializing level for the Morehouse family. This balcony would have been roofless as the cornice of the mansard roof was elegantly scalloped and bracketed."<sup>3</sup>

Evidence of the interior of the building not being completed by Morehouse was substantiated by the relatives of second owner, William Childs. Reportedly, "half of the ground floor remained unfinished with an oyster shell floor, the south half of the first floor was the kitchen."<sup>4</sup>

With the death of the widowed Morehouse in 1899, the property at 119 Charles Street was devised to Josephine Farrington. Born in New York, the unmarried Farrington was born in June 1865. No association between the Morehouses and Farrington has been established, suggesting she was a distant relative or family friend from New York. Farrington lived in the dwelling at 119 Charles Street, maintaining the structure as a boarding house with the aid of servant Ellen Frady.

In November 1901, for a cost of $2000, Farrington sold the property to William Fennimore Childs. A grocer with commercial space on Conduit Street, Childs was born in 1851. Childs occupied the Charles Street dwelling with his wife, Mary B., and his twelve children.

The Childs family was responsible for significant alterations, the first of which included the completion of the ground floor. The evidence presented by Bohl's inspection of the building and a 1970 photograph document the alteration of the full-width front porch from a balcony to a screened porch with a half-hipped roof.<sup>5</sup> The tax assessments indicate this alteration was conducted by Child's prior to June 1913, with an assessment of $150. Childs also had the entire structure clad with square-butt wood shingles, removed the false windows from the north side, and altered the cornice by adding the porch roof.

According to the Childs' last will and testament, the Charles Street property, referred to as "The Home," was to be devised to his wife. Upon her death, Childs specified that all of his unmarried daughters were to obtain an interest in the house. Thus, in 1939, school teachers Minnie and Lillian, along with sister Helen, jointly owned the dwelling in which they lived. The Childs family remained the owners and occupants of the building until 1967, selling it to T. Leonard and Roberta Mikules. One year later, in October 1968, Wolfgang and Marilyn Rosenberg purchased the property in which they lived for eight years.

In 1976, it was then purchased by Roger F. and Patricia Crawford. According to Charles Bohl, the Crawfords planned to restore the dwelling. However, within seven months of buying the property, the Crawfords conveyed the building to the Princess Construction Corporation of Washington, DC. No longer in operation, Princess Construction was owned by Richard N. Dubin, Lawrence Z. Bulman, and Albert R. Hinton. During the ten years of ownership by the construction company, the single-family dwelling was renovated on the interior to serve as two separate houses. This work included the construction of two kitchens, more bathrooms and two sets of interior stairs, as well as new rear decks. Additional alterations included the removal of the wood shingles and the two phase front porch as altered by Childs in 1913. Following this, the cornice was restored and a one-bay wide deck constructed that flanked the main entry on the facade.

With the completion of the rehabilitation, the dwellings were recorded as condominiums denoted 119A and 119B Charles Street. In January 1989, 119B Charles Street was sold separately to Kathleen K. Farley. Residing in the condominium until 1995, Farley sold the property to the Bissell Generation Skipping Trust. As the present owner, Peter J. Denucci currently occupies the dwelling he purchased in January 1998 from the trust.

The construction company retained ownership of 119A Charles Street for another year, selling it in January 1990 to Alice F. Carran. Carran sold the dwelling in 1993 to William N. 4. NOTABLE FEATURES, HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE AND DESCRIPTION  119 Charles Street is an elegant Victorian structure with detailing that has a French quality about it. 3rd storey is a bell cast mansard with five 2/2 dormer windows with rounded tops (see 107 Conduit St.) 2nd storey appears to be main floor with a veranda-porch. Windows are almost floor to ceiling length, 2/2, with shutters and pointed molded cap lintels. 2nd storey "front door" has pointed lintel, transom side lights and very fine period door with two rounded arch panels. Ground floor is identical to 2nd floor but minus lintels and transom. A refined, sophisticated Victorian piece, merely needs woodwork painted. (115-117 are same period but owner perhaps waiting to take advantage of parking lot on South St. which backs up to 115, 117, and 119).		OPEN TO PUBLIC no
