

CAPSULE SUMMARY
Anne Claude Building
224 Main Street
(AA-586)

The Anne Claude Building, built between 1858 and 1871 on previously undeveloped land, is a modest brick commercial building that has been significantly altered by the application of a wood weatherboard facade. This mid-19th century structure provides important insight into the physical development of Main Street and is historically associated with the prominent Claude family, making it an important contributor to the Annapolis Historic District.

The building was originally constructed as a two-story, two-bay, side-passage brick dwelling which saw the addition of a wood facade and a single-bay infill connecting 224 to 228 Main Street between 1913 and 1921. The current storefront, built ca. 1984 to replace a mid-20th century storefront, restored the building to its 1913-1921 appearance. The storefront includes a side-passage entry to the upper stories and a central entry to the retail space, flanked by windows. Above the storefront and separating it from the second story, is a projecting wood cornice supported by four wood brackets.

Built as a commercial building, it was owned by the Claude family from its circa 1858-1871 construction through 1885; after 1885, the building housed a confectionery, tailor shop, restaurant and various other offices and commercial enterprises. The Chesapeake Savings and Loan owned and occupied the building from 1966 through 1989. Owned by the Maryland Medical and Chiurgical Faculty, it is currently leased to the Maryland Democratic Party.

Built between 1858 and 1871,¹ the two-story, two-bay building at 224 Main Street is located on the northeast side of Main Street just south of Church Circle. The original free-standing building is constructed of brick; however, a front facade with wood weatherboard was added to the building at the same time that a single-bay brick infill connected 224 to 228 Main Street, and a two-story brick wing at the rear of the building replaced earlier, 19th century frame shed additions. The building is covered with a sloped, stepped roof and is separated from the building at 220 Main Street by a narrow alley.

The front elevation of 224 Main Street consists of a side-passage entry and a storefront on the first story and two bays of windows on the second story. The front wall, covered with wide wood weatherboarding, is a veneer applied between 1913 and 1921 to the original brick wall. This veneer brought the slightly recessed building up to the lot line and flush with the building next to it at 228 Main Street. At the same time, an exterior stair which was appended to the northwest side elevation of the building and connected 224 and 228 Main Street, was enclosed. This single-bay brick infill is also flush with the front wall surfaces of 224 and 228 Main Street.

The side-passage entry, located in the northwest end bay, has a four-panelled wood replacement door. The storefront features a central four-light glass door flanked by four-light windows set upon wood panels. This storefront, built ca. 1984 having replaced a mid-20th century storefront, returns the first story to its 1913-1921 appearance. Above the side-passage door and storefront is a projecting wood cornice supported by four wood brackets. The cornice extends across the front of the building, returning on the side elevations, and separates the first story from the second story.

The second story has two, 2/2 windows and shutters, dating from the 1913-1921 period. Above the second story windows is a projecting box cornice which extends approximately eight inches beyond the edge of the roof.

¹ The building at 224 Main Street was originally located on a larger lot of land, which in 1871 contained one two-story brick house, which according to the description corresponds with 224 Main Street. The building does not appear on the site on the 1858 Sachse Birds Eye View of Annapolis.

The southeast elevation extends along the narrow alley between 224 and 220 Main Street and includes both the original side wall and the addition. The entire wall is covered with a stucco finish. Two window openings, with aluminum sash and fake muntins, are located on the second story.

The rear of the building was not accessible and was not surveyed.

A cursory inspection of the first floor commercial space, renovated in 1984, revealed no historic elements or fabric.

Built between 1858 and 1871, the building at 224 Main Street was constructed on the northeast side of Main Street, approximately 50 yards from Church Circle. Constructed by members of the prominent Claude family, the erection of the building in this period on formerly undeveloped land provides important insight into the physical development of Main Street.

The land on which 224 Main Street is located originally occupied a portion of the large triangular lot of ground designated Lot 73 on the Stoddert Map of 1718. The land was owned in the early 1720s by Margaret and John Steele, who conveyed it to Robert Johnson in 1722. Johnson constructed a dwelling on the property, which was enlarged in 1745 by George Johnson. Throughout the 18th century the property was devised and conveyed several times amongst the Johnson family. The 1798 Federal Direct Tax indicates that the property contained a frame house on Church Street, assessed at $400.00, and a brick house on School Street, assessed at $800.00.²

By 1808, the lot was conveyed by order of the Chancery Court to Charles Wallace, the prominent merchant and builder of the State House. The deed of sale states that the Church Street dwelling was leased by Richard Harwood, while the brick dwelling on School Street was occupied by John Johnson.³ Within a matter of days the property fronting on Church Street was conveyed to Elizabeth Thompson for $133.00. Just three years later, Thompson purchased the remainder of the lot from John Johnson, who had relocated to Prince George's County. Samuel Maynard purchased the property in 1822 from Elizabeth Thompson.

In 1833, Dr. Dennis Claude purchased the property in its entirety from Samuel Maynard.⁴ In 1855, Ann Claude obtained a portion of the property, without buildings on it⁵, as part of an equity proceeding. This portion of land corresponds with the two parcels currently occupied by the buildings at 224 and 226-228 Main Street.

⁵ The deed makes no mentions of buildings on the site (Liber NHG 5 Folio 108).

By 1871, Anne Claude had died and the property was transferred to her son, Abram Claude, Jr.⁶ The deed transferring the property mentions a two-story brick house on the site. The description of the deed reads, "beginning...at the southwest corner of the two-story brick house standing on said lot," indicating that the building at 224 Main Street, which is at the southern end of the property, stood at that time. It does not, however, preclude the existence of 226-228 at that time as well. In any case, the building is definitely on the site by 1877, as it appears on Gray's Map of Annapolis.

The property remained intact until 1885, when Abram Claude divided it into two and sold the parcel on which 224 Main Street stands. Abram Claude held onto 226-228 Main Street until 1896. In 1885, Abram Claude conveyed 224 Main Street, used as a confectionery, to Elizabeth Dorsey. Dorsey conveyed the building, now used as a cigar shop, to Robert and Elizabeth Redmond in 1899.⁷ According to the Sanborn Maps, the building was leased as a tailor's shop in 1897 and a restaurant in 1908 through 1921. The census records for 1900 list Robert Redmond as the owner/occupant of the building. Redmond was born in Maryland in 1866 to Scottish parents.

The city directory for 1928-1929 shows that the name of the restaurant was "The Annapolis Restaurant," and that Victor Characklis occupied the upper floor. In 1949 and 1954, the city directory states that the building was occupied by the Lincoln Loan Service.

The Redmonds bequeathed the building in 1961 to their children, Elizabeth Weber, Ann Slaven, Millicent Briel, and Isabel Crutcher. The Redmond heirs conveyed the property in 1966 to the Cheseapeake Savings and Loan Association, who owned and occupied the building until 1989 when it was purchased by the State of Maryland Medical and Chirurgical Faculty. The building is currently leased to the Maryland Democratic Party.

Though altered on the ground floor this small building is important as it is part of group of same scale buildings (224-236). The attractive, brown stained clapboards appear to be a recent facade, however, a plain wood cornice and upstairs windows remain from earlier period. Windows have narrow shutters and 2/2 window panes (original). Color scheme is attractive. Any replacement of this building would have to be same size, so present usable building should be preserved. The wood is nice on a street with so much brick.
