

Capsule Summary of 234 Main Street (AA-589)

Built in the period between 1820 and 1841, the property at 234 Main Street, together with its attached neighbor at 230-232 Main Street, are known as the Price House. The pair was constructed by Henry Price, described as a "free person of color."¹ Unlike many of the late 18th century and early 19th century buildings along Main Street which were later "modernized" in the "Italianate" style, the buildings together survive as an example of the more modest residential/commercial buildings which were constructed in that period.

Set upon a brick foundation, the building is constructed of brick, laid in Flemish bond² with a pressed brick front elevation. It is covered with a gable roof, clad with asphalt shingles. An exterior end chimney, originally located on the northwest elevation, was dismantled; a stucco finish revealing the outline of the chimney is visible against the southeast wall of the bank building next to it. A brick chimney located on center of the pair of buildings has also been dismantled; evidence of this chimney is visible in the interior of the building.

² The front elevation is clearly Flemish bond; the side walls, visible on the interior appear to be random or Random Flemish.

Built in the period between 1820 and 1841,¹ the building at 234 Main Street is one of two small-scaled and attached buildings on the northeast side of Main Street, immediately south of Church Circle. The building is attached to 230-232 Main Street to the south, and shares a common roof and cornice line with it.²

Set upon a brick foundation, the building is constructed of brick, laid in Flemish bond³ with a pressed brick front elevation. It is covered with a gable roof, clad with asphalt shingles. An exterior end chimney, originally located on the northwest elevation, was dismantled; a stucco finish revealing the outline of the chimney is visible against the southeast wall of the bank building next to it. A brick chimney located on center of the pair of buildings has also been dismantled; evidence of this chimney is visible in the interior of the building.

The southwest elevation of the building consists of a side-passage entry and storefront on the first story and three bays of windows on the second story. The side-passage entry is filled with a four-panelled wood door with a single-light transom, covered with paint and surmounted by a jack-arched lintel, painted to simulate a flat stone or wood lintel. The wooden storefront, a contemporary replacement designed in a late-19th century commercial Italianate style, is applied directly to the brick wall surface and consists of a central entry, with a four-panelled wood door, flanked by show windows. The windows, raised above recessed wood panels, have four, fixed lights. The wood surround culminates above the door and windows with a bracketed wood cornice. Four brackets extend across the boxed cornice, separating the window bays from the central door bay.

The second story has three unequally spaced windows, two of which have been altered. The 2/2 window in the northwest bay, immediately above the side-passage entry, has a jack-arched lintel. The two window openings to the south have been widened and filled with 1/1 replacement sash. The jack-arched lintels of the original, narrower openings are visible above the widened windows. The jack-arched lintels of all three windows have been painted to appear as flat, stone or wood lintels and to give the altered windows cohesiveness with the single window to the north.⁴

¹ The buildings are not mentioned in the deed of conveyance to Price in 1820, but are noted in the transfer of 1841.

² Although one building is frame and the other is brick, they are of similar size and scale, share similar histories, and are considered a single building in deed references.

³ The front elevation is clearly Flemish bond; the side walls, visible on the interior appear to be random or Random Flemish.

A continuous cornice extends from 234 to the attached building at 230-232 Main Street, while the gable roof similarly extends across the neighboring building.

The rear elevation of this building is not accessible from the exterior.

The interior of the building consists of a single room on the first floor that has been recently renovated.⁵ Altered to create a rectangle in plan, the room has exposed brick on the original southeast wall. Close examination of the wall indicates that historically there was a chimney located at the center of what was originally a square room. The chimney was removed, possibly due to deterioration, and the opening infilled with brick, thus accounting for the lack of a fireplace opening. Located near the south corner of the room is an opening, with a segmental-arched brick lintel, that has been infilled with wood and brick. Because the building was historically associated with 230-232 Main Street, it is speculated that the opening was originally an interior door.

Located on the northwest wall is an enclosed quarter-flight stair, contemporarily finished with a newel and rail of two-by-fours. The ceiling has been covered the reflective panels, the floor partially covered with ceramic tiles, and the square-edged baseboard is finished with only quadrant beading. The upper floor was not accessible and was not surveyed.

⁵ This building was originally one-room deep. The rear wall of the building was been removed and the space opens directly into the rear addition.

Built in the period between 1820 and 1841, the property at 234 Main Street, together with its attached neighbor at 230-232 Main Street, are known as the Price House. The pair was constructed by Henry Price, described as a "free person of color."⁶ Unlike many of the late 18th century and early 19th century buildings along Main Street which were later "modernized" in the "Italianate" style, the buildings together survive as an example of the more modest residential/commercial buildings which were constructed in that period.

The land on which 234 Main Street is located originally occupied a portion of the large triangular lot of ground designated Lot 73 on the Stoddert Map of 1718. By the mid-18th century, this large lot of land was divided into several parcels and was owned by various individuals. Secondary sources indicate that the land was the site of the saddlery and sign-painting shop operated by Charles Wilson Peale from 1763 to 1765.⁷ Based upon the property lines, it appears that, from 1765 to 1780, 234 Main Street was located on a parcel of land owned by Nathan Waters. In 1780, Waters conveyed this parcel to his granddaughter, Elizabeth Chisholm, who married Archibald Chisholm. In 1787, Archibald Chisholm again divided the property by selling a 27-foot frontage of the property on School Street. In 1798, Chisholm was charged with one, single-story frame dwelling house and a brick kitchen, in bad repair. Neither of these buildings survive today.

In 1803, Archibald Chisholm and his wife leased the property to Edward Roberts, for 99 years. Between the years 1799 and 1809, the ownership rights to the property were being examined in the General Courts, because of a petition submitted by Benjamin Harrison. The courts ordered the property be sold to the highest bidder at a public sale. Since no bidders were taken for the property known today as 234 Main Street, it was transferred to Thomas Waters. Waters owned and leased the property until 1837 when he sold it to Mary Jane Price. In 1841, Price conveyed partial ownership to her husband Henry Price.

According to Elizabeth Anderson in A Walk Through History, the buildings at 230-232 Main Street and 234 Main Street are together called the Price House, named after their builder, Henry Price. Price, a "free person of color," built the house in the years between 1820 and 1841. Price died in 1863.

Upon the death of Henry Price in 1863, his daughter Sarah Williams was bequeathed the property and following a decree of the Circuit Court of Anne Arundel County in 1879, she did infact obtain ownership from her mother, Mary J. Price. In 1880, Sarah Williams sold the property to Joseph S. Hays. The deed transaction for that sale mentions a dwelling house and store, part brick and frame.⁸ This would correspond with the frame building at 230-232 Main Street and the brick building at 234 Main Street, and confirms that the two buildings historically, were considered one. Although considered a single building in the deeds, the historic maps show the buildings as two separate structures, having different uses.

In 1885, the building at 230-232 Main Street was a jewelry store and the building at 234 Main Street was a fancy goods store. The census records for 1880 show that Joseph Hays, a sewing machine dealer, did infact occupy the building. The census records for 1900 list Joseph Hays as the occupant of 234 Main Street, while 232 Main Street was leased by Sarah J. Rullman and her children.

The property remained in the Hays family for over 80 years. During the Hays family ownership of the property, from 1880 until 1948, the use of the two buildings changed frequently. In 1891 and 1897, 234 Main Street is shown as an office; from 1903 to 1913 it is marked "music" implying that it sold mercandise associated to music, such as instruments, and in 1921, "pianos" is noted on the building. In 1930', it is shown simply as a store.

In 1948, the property was purchased by Royal and Louise R. Wigby. In 1958, Wigby divided the property in two; he sold 230-232 Main Street to the Annapolis Banking and Trust Company and 234 to Patricia Holden. The property is currently owned by Norman Fields Revocable Trust and is occupied at the retail level by Embassy Opticians.

ADDITIONAL ARCHITECTURAL OR STRUCTURAL DESCRIPTION:

AA-589

Flemish bond, second floor windows have crude splayed brick arches, which may have replaced timber lintels. The arches are painted to simulate flat lintels and have been so treated for at least the past fifty years. Right and center window oversized and assymmetrically placed in regard to left window; transom lit Italianate round paneled door to second floor in left bay; shop front is late 19thC but extremely well designed, recently restored.

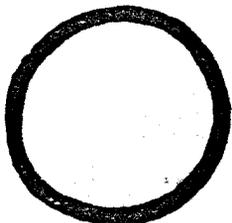

RELATED STRUCTURES: (Describe)

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE:

Interesting but altered Federal townhouse of visual interest because of design anomalies; excellent shopfront Important to streetscape and part of an important row.

. A delightful early, small building - has a shop (later 19th C.) and doorway to stairs on street level. Doorway and 3 upstairs windows have primitively done splayed brick lintels (painted white). Windows are of 2 different sizes and unsymmetrically placed - adding to picturesque quality. (Rather a steep roof for Federal period, however, shares roof with 230-232 - may have been changed - or building may be older.) Flemish bond. Chimney outline on Annapolis Bank & Trust Co. One of earliest on street. Very important and fun visually.
