Description: This building is a three bay wide, four story high, brick structure with wood trim. The central entrance on the first floor is flanked by double, one over one windows with transom windows above. The second and third story has central, one over one windows flanked by three part, one over one bay windows. On the fourth story there is one central, one over one window, flanked by three smaller one over one windows. Above the fourth story is some rusticated geometric brick patterns. On either end of the building near the roofline are two elaborate grotesques and the building is without a cornice. The roofline does extend up in the center with scroll and leaf details and the date 1890. There is dentil molding above and at the base of each bay window.

Significance:

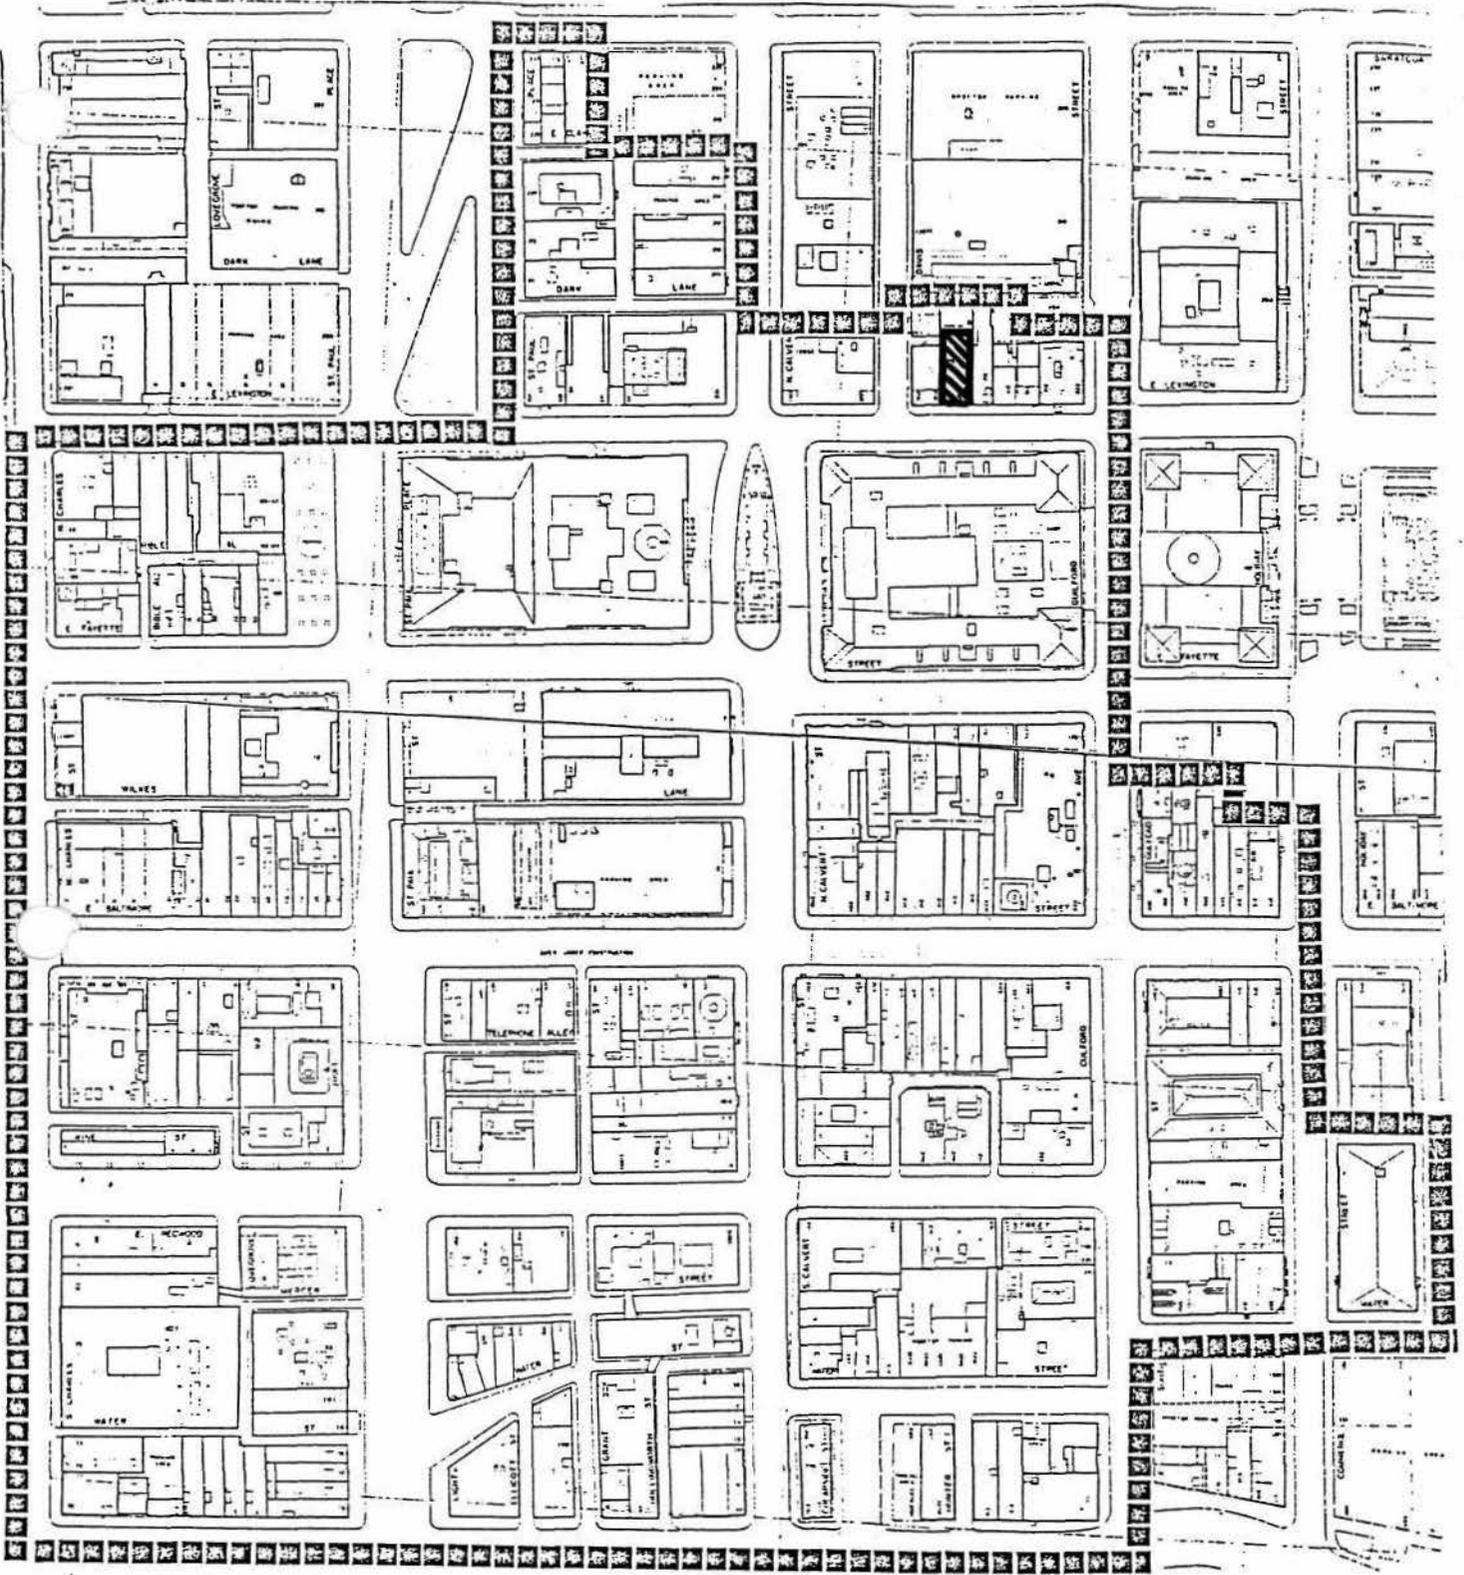

Area: architecture

Level: local

The Vansant Building was built in 1890 and is one of the more distinctive architecturally significant, commercial structures in the Financial District. The building features three part, one over one bay windows, rusticated geometric brick patterns, elaborate grotesques and some carved scroll and leaf details. The building is presently undergoing renovations and it makes a significant contribution to the historic character of the area.
