Description:

These two buildings are each two stories high and one bay wide. The storefront at 206 East Baltimore Street has been covered with aluminum on the upper floors. Over an altered storefront, 208 East Baltimore Street reveals a large segmental arch filled with casement windows. The surround features circular designs. End brackets support a modillion block cornice and parapet with pronounced end blocks.

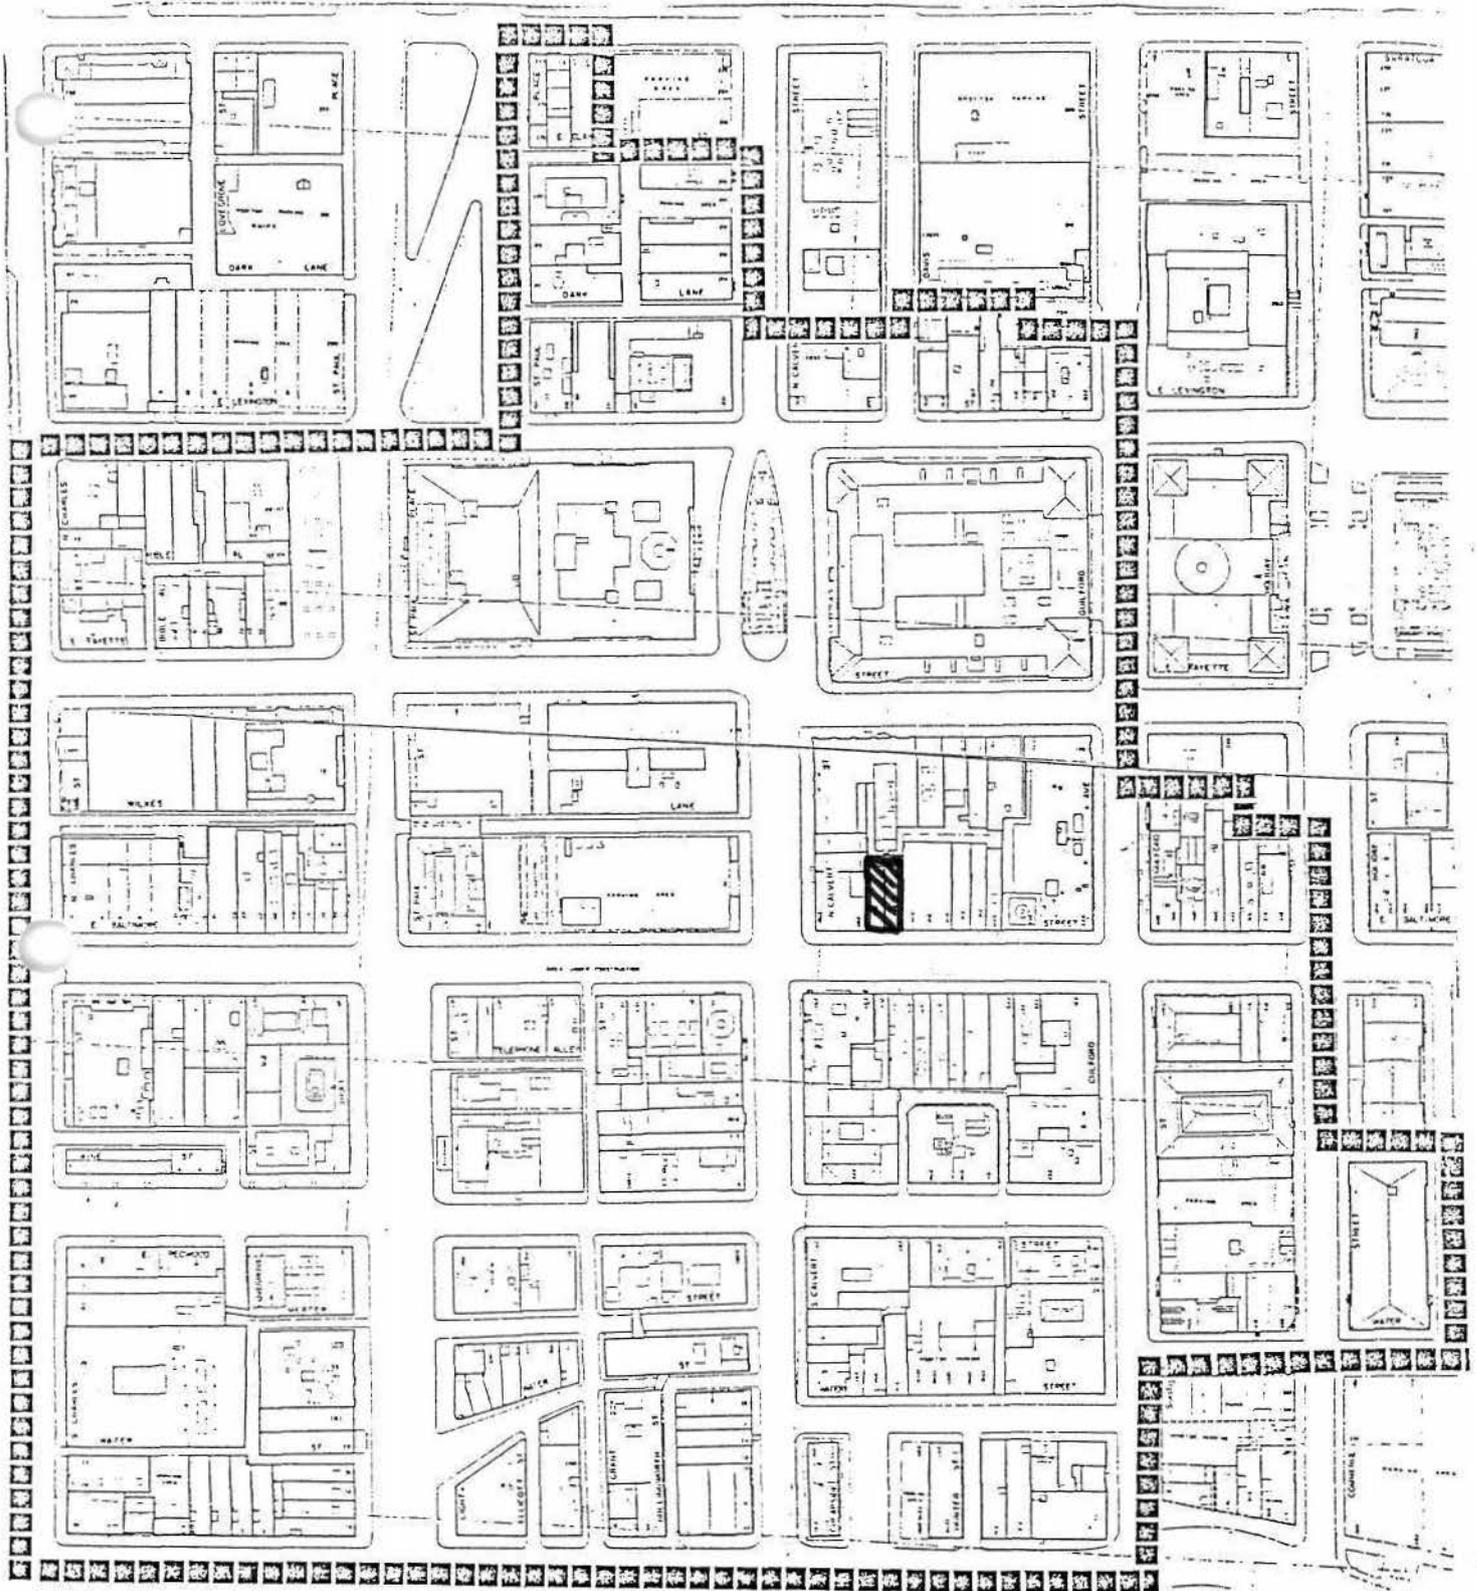

Significance:

Area: Architecture

Level: Local

These two buildings are unfortunate examples of the types of alterations commercial buildings in the Financial District have suffered. The entire upper floor facade of 206 East Baltimore Street has been covered over, however, it appears that the original design may still exist behind the aluminum. If the first floor alterations were reversed and the upper floors returned to the original, these buildings would be contributing structures along East Baltimore Street.
