STYLE (IF APPROPRIATE):

DESCRIPTION:

The three two-story, two-bay brick rowhouses were built about 1880 on the east side of Shuter Street, an alley street, just north of Ashland Street in east central Baltimore, Maryland. The facades are very simple, with flat arches at the boarded openings and concrete steps. No. 901 has a formstone covering and is missing its cornice. The intact cornice of the remaining two has simple brackets which continue on the entire row. Nos. 903 and 905 have tie rod plates over each first story opening. One second story window arch at 903 is deteriorated and some bricks have fallen out.

SIGNIFICANCE:

AREA: Architecture

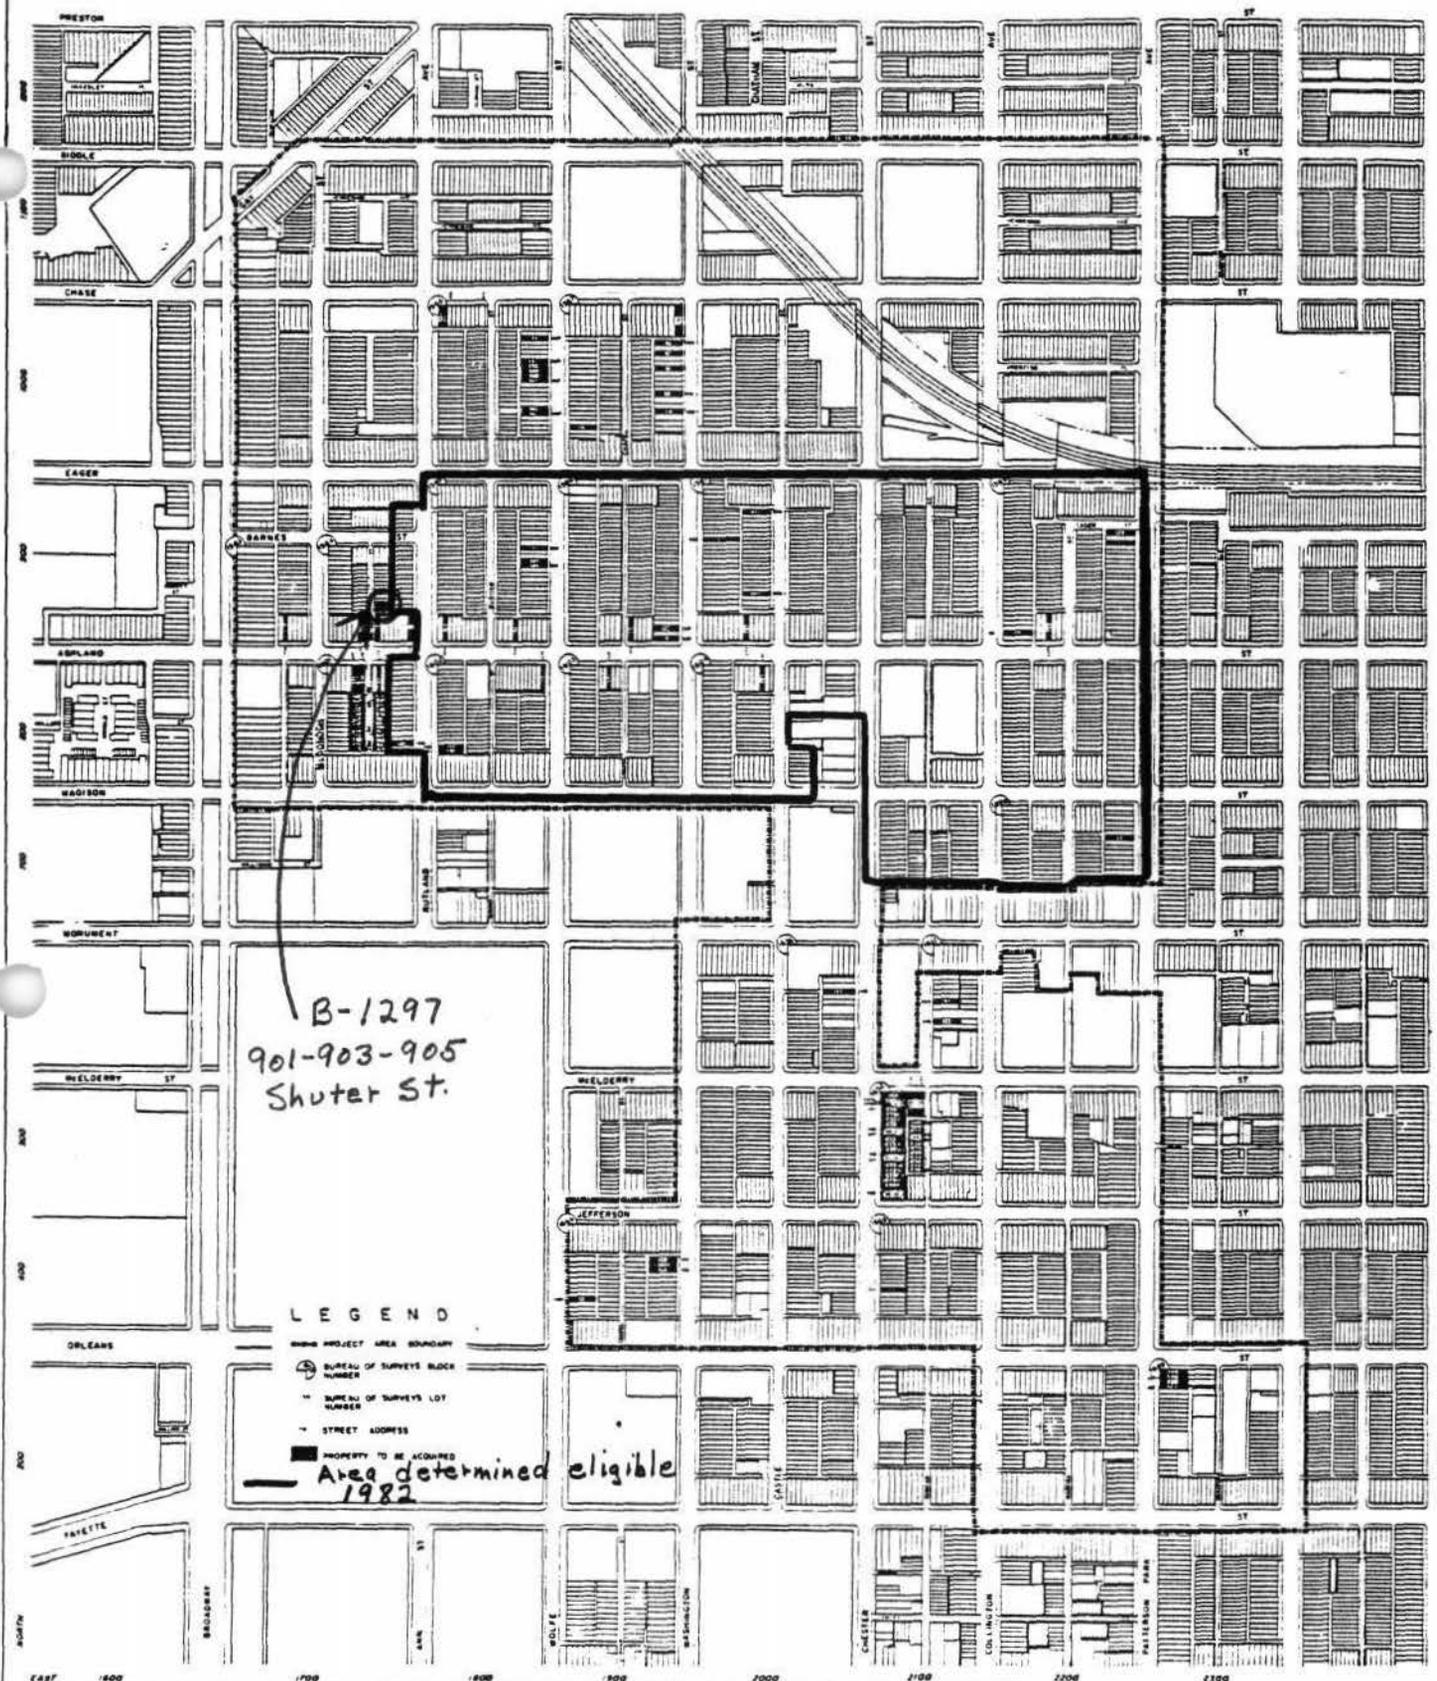

LEVEL: Local

The three houses at 901-903-905 Shuter Street are contributing structures in an undefined historic district of late 19th century rowhouses. They are immediately adjacent to the area of the Middle East planning sector which was previously determined eligible for the National Register. The 900 block of Shuter Street was apparently excluded from the earlier determination because of its generally deteriorated state. However, many of the characteristics of the eligible district are still present in the Shuter Street houses in spite of alterations and deterioration.
