DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Flag House is a two-and-one-half story Federal corner row house of salmon brick laid in Flemish bond. Three bays wide, it has a black slate hipped roof and a chimney on the left side. Apparently, built in 1793 and added to in 1820, the house has a living room, dining room-kitchen and hall on the first floor, two bedrooms on the second and servants' quarters on the third.

Mary Young Pickersgill bought the house in 1820, after renting it for thirteen years. Almost immediately after acquiring the property, Mrs. Pickersgill added a two story wing in the rear (a kitchen on the ground floor and a boarder's room on the second). She lived in this house until her death in 1857, and it remained in the family until 1864. During the next six decades, the house changed hands frequently and served a variety of purposes, including those of saloon and warehouse. Alterations included the construction of a display window in front.

The City of Baltimore purchased the building in 1929, and since that time it has been maintained as an historic building. One of the first things the city did was to remove the storefront window and restore the original facade on the Pratt Street side. Other restoration work included reconstruction of a partition between the dining room and living room. Workmen added steel beams under the first floor for greater strength. The staircase and two of the six mantels in the house are original.

In 1953 the city erected a one-and-one-half story dependency building behind the main house. The new building, built in the same style, conforms well with the Flag House and is connected to it by a covered breezeway. Presently called the 1812 Museum, the building contains, on the first floor, two rooms in which are placed mementoes of the War of 1812 that had originally been displayed in the Flag House. Located on the second floor are the offices of the Star-Spangled Banner Flag House Association, Incorporated. This building is included in the landmark.

Boundary Information and Justification

The Star-Spangled Banner Flag House sits on a lot located at 844 East Pratt Street and faces south. Beginning at the point of intersection of East Pratt and Albemarle Streets proceed due north along the western side of Albemarle Street to a point of intersection with Granby Street; thence proceed west along the southern side of Granby Street to a point of intersection with Slimmers Alley; thence proceed south along the eastern side of Slimmers Alley to a point of intersection with East Pratt Street; thence east along the northern side of East Pratt Street to the point of origin. An iron fence with interposing brick columns completely surrounds this property, and runs parellel to each street. Located in a garden on the west side of the house is a memorial map of the Continental United States composed of stones from each of the then 48 states.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

In her home at 844 East Pratt Street, Mary Young Pickersgill (1776-1857) designed and fabricated the flag that floated over Fort McHenry in the Battle of Baltimore, September 13-14, 1814. From an American sloop within the enemy fleet, Francis Scott Key, inspired by the sight of the "Star-Spangled Banner," as she withstood heavy bombardment by the British secret weapon of rockets, wrote the poem which today is heard around the world as the National Anthem of the United States of America.

Assisted in the work by her daughter, her niece, and her mother, Mrs. Pickersgill completed the flag on August 13, 1813, to fulfill her contract with local military authorities. Thirty by 42 feet, the flag upon its completion was the largest in the world and featured 15 giant stars and 15 mammoth stripes. The flag, which has been preserved in fairly good condition, is the property of the Smithsonian Institution and may be seen on display in the museum of History and Technology in Washington, D.C.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Star-Spangled Banner Flag House is located on the northwest corner of East Pratt Street, Baltimore, Maryland.

The approximate square foot ground coverage of the house is 854 square feet. The property is 0.443 acres (19,317 square feet).

Built about 1793, one of the oldest houses in the area, it is a two-and-a-half-story, rectangular, corner row house of salmon brick laid in Flemish bond with black slate hipped roof. Facing on Pratt Street, the narrow facade has three second-floor windows, two first-floor windows and an entrance. The longer elevation on Albemarle Street has a grouping of five windows on each floor. The north bays form an addition of about 1820.

The entrance door on Pratt Street is in the southeast corner of the house. The entrance used by the public through the Albemarle Street gate is on the northeast corner of the north (1820) addition. The roofline runs north/south.

Restored in the Federal (1800-1825) period, the house contains many original mantels and doors, butterfly shelves and cupboards. The stairway with poplar rail and half rail is original. Many Pickersgill possessions have been returned to the house including a desk, tea set, Lowestoft platter, Waterford pitchers and a punchbowl, French Empire clock, and scent bottles.

On the yard a Stone Map of the United States, composed of stones native to each state, gives a graphic geography lesson.

In 1953, a Museum was built north of the main building, attached by an open, roofed breezeway. It houses exhibits of the War of 1812, ship models, muskets, pistols, swords, epaulets and bright figurines.

The house is situated south of the Shot Tower and the Carroll Mansion.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE
The national significance of this building is its association with the creation, representation, interpretation and symbolism of our original Star Spangled Banner flag; the subsequent and lasting sight of the flag flying which inspired Francis Scott Key, on September 14, 1814, to compose the Star Spangled Banner, our National Anthem. Mrs. Mary Young Pickersgill was the niece of Colonel Benjamin Flower, Commissary General for George Washington, whose portrait by Charles Willson Peale now hangs in the house. Mrs. Pickersgill was the owner at the time she and her daughter (sewed) in this building, the fifteen star - fifteen stripe original Star Spangled Banner that so defiantly flew over Fort McHenry through the night of bombardment during the Battle of Baltimore in 1813-1814. The symbol of American independence and the patriotism that over the years has grown in stature by stars and stripes, flies proudly twenty-four hours of each day over the Fort. Mrs. Pickersgill's home was recognized by an act of Congress June 1954, thereby according it, also, the privilege of flying an American flag twenty-four hours a day. Thus Baltimore is privileged to have two of the five such distinguished national sites. During the remainder of the nineteenth century the house was a rowhouse on Pratt Street in Baltimore. The patriotic fervor engendered during the ceremonies surrounding the Star Spangled Banner Centennial in 1914 awakened an interest in the structure because of its relation to the Star Spangled Banner flag, the American symbol. In 1927, the City of Baltimore purchased the house, to preserve the tangible remnant of the story and events relating to the flag of 1814. The Star-Spangled Banner Flag House Association was created to preserve the meaning and the message enacted at Fort McHenry; to interpret the evolution and representation [see continuation sheet]

c. 1793, 1820

Apparently built c. 1793 and added to in 1820, the Flag House is a 2 1/2-story Federal corner rowhouse of salmon brick laid in Flemish bond. Three bays wide on its south or front side, the house was originally three bays long on the east facade, but was expanded to the north by two additional bays. A large chimney protrudes from the west side of the hip roof, and a smaller chimney rises from the north end. Two gable-roofed dormers with 6/6 sash windows pierce the east slope of the roof, and a single dormer pierces the south slope. First and second floor windows throughout hold 9/6 sash. These represent restoration work, as a 1953 photograph shows 6/6 sash on the first floor. First floor windows have paneled shutters, while those on the second floor have louvered shutters. At the time of the photograph, a combination door and shop window comprised the center and east bays of the south facade. This facade has undergone a restoration, and the entrance with a three-light transom and paneled reveal stands in the east bay, with two windows to the left. The center bay of the east facade also contained a door in the 1953 photograph, but this has been restored to a window opening. A brick watertable spans only the south facade. On the interior, the house has a living room, a dining room-kitchen, and hall on the first floor, two bedrooms on the second floor, and servants' quarters on the third. A display building was constructed in the front of the building in the late 19th or early 20th century. After the City of Baltimore purchased the building, the facade was restored to its original appearance, an original interior partition was reconstructed, and steel beams were added under the first floor for greater strength. The staircase and two of the six mantels in the house are original. In 1953 a 1 1/2-story dependency building was constructed to the rear, connected to the main house by a covered breezeway.

In August of 1813, Mrs. Mary Young Pickersgill and her daughter finished sewing a 15-star, 15-stripe American flag commissioned to be flown over Fort McHenry. The flag measured 30 feet by 42 feet. It flew over Fort McHenry during the British attack on Baltimore, and on the night of September 13-14, 1814, served as the inspiration for a poem by Francis Scott Key which eventually became the national anthem, "The Star-Spangled Banner."
