Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

This group of twelve two-bay-wide, two-story brick houses with low-pitched gable roofs are typical of the small alley houses built in Baltimore in the 1850s and 1860s, often along especially narrow secondary alley streets running perpendicularly off the main "alley" street. In many cases, alley houses such as these are still occupied by working class families and many are still covered with the formstone put on in the 1950s or 1960s.

The houses are two stories in height and each two-room deep house has a one-story brick rear kitchen addition somewhat narrower than the house. The pitch of the gable roof is especially low, a characteristic of this particular type of two-story, gable-roofed alley house. The houses are constructed in common bond, but most of the facades are now covered with formstone or stucco. The houses have simple brick corbelled cornices, but most are obscured by the formstone covering. Chimneys are located at the rear end of the kitchen addition.

Door and window openings have either segmentally arched brick lintels, with plain tympanums and brick sills (at 422-428) or flat wood lintels and sills (at 406-420). The windows are filled with replacement 1/1 or 6/6 sash. No original doors survive and the row shows a mix of replacement door styles, all surmounted by a single light transom. The houses sit on very low basements, some lit by a single-light transom, the entrances being reached by one or two brick or concrete steps. A flat-linteled alleyway runs between most pairs of houses.

The houses are basically two rooms deep, with the front room being entered directly from the front door. The front and back rooms of the first floor are separated by a wide opening, with the tightly winding, narrow stairs set in the rear room, in the space between the partition wall and the fireplace. The one-story rear addition served as the kitchen, with its own cooking fireplace.

Builder/Architect

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

These houses are significant as being representative of a surviving group of extremely modest two-story, gable-roofed houses built in Fells Point in the 1850s and 1860s to serve as inexpensive housing for the influx of newly arrived immigrant families seeking work in harbor-related activities or in the first small factories being built at this time. Houses sold for about $500 - $600 to mainly German-American craftsman and laborers, or rented for some $8 a month. Most such houses were held as rental property and most were located along narrow alley streets, or along even narrower courts. In terms of design, the houses are basically the descendants of earlier Federal-style working class housing built in the early decades of the century, but without the usual dormer story of such houses. Because there is no dormer story the roof slope is much less steep in these later versions of the style. The houses are quite tiny, with two small rooms on each floor and a centrally located, tightly winding, narrow staircase.

They are still inhabited by working class residents.
