

205 BOSLEY AVE.

The widening of Bosley Ave. left the east side of the street nearly stripped of historic value. One of the exceptions, however, is this house which has been altered and adapted into offices. It is a part of a group of houses, however, which regardless of style and plan are all early 20th century members of the "shingle style." The building may be seen as the westernmost member of that group separating the neighborhood from the six lane highway that Bosley Ave. has become.

There is much to be said for the interior details of the house which includes a finished attic that can only be described as "totally designed." This pleasant room is completely finished in natural wood paneling and contains built-in cabinets, seats and a bed made of the same wood.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Only a few residential structures still exist on the east side of Bosley Ave. and this is one of them. This building is now being used for commercial purposes.

A brick facade and alterations conceal the fact that this is a frame structure covered with wooden shingles. The 2½ story, longitudinally planned building rests on a high foundation and has a gable-end roof. It is two bays wide and the equivalent of four bays deep with an additional one bay wing projecting to the east and extending the north facade.

This building shares many features of those in the bungalows on the 100 block of Susquehanna Ave. These include the rock-face formstone foundation, brown wooden shingles, a projecting bay window and 6/1 sash windows. There is also a penetration of the deep eaves by an exterior chimney on the south facade.

The main facade, facing west, has been greatly altered by a brick facing. The upper story has windows in either bay, while the lower story has a 2½ light window in the northern bay and an entrance in the southern bay.

The south facade displays an irregular fenestration in the placement, size and type of window. In the westernmost bay exists a 6/1 sash up and down. A window of the same type is centrally located between the first and second level in the second bay. The chimney penetrates the overhanging eaves slightly off center to the east of the ridge. A double four light casement window is just east of this chimney. There are also small cellar windows.

A two story single bay wing projects from the east facade in the northernmost bay, and appears to be original due to the foundation and materials. A single story shed roofed wing projects from it to the south.

The north facade extends the total five bays and contains an exterior chimney in the west bay. The easternmost bay of the second story contains three 6/1 sash windows, and there is one 6/1 sash in the central and easternmost bays of the first story.

The lay out of the interior is based on the shot gun plan of room placement with one long (transverse) room in front (West) which connects to the dining area by a double door 6' high (Middle), and a kitchen, pantry and bath in back (East). The west room contains a brick wood-burning fireplace which may not be original. Cabinets have been built on either side. There is a kitty-cornered closet in the southwest near the main entrance door.

A dog-leg stair runs along the southwest wall and leads to the second story which contains three bedrooms and one bathroom in the main block and one bedroom in the east wing.

The attic is a ½ story with knee walls and trapezoidal ceiling. It contains a hall with a closet and one full bedroom. This westerly located room is unique in that it has built-in natural wood cabinets with solid or glass doors, occupying the entire space of the knee walls and a built-in single bed and window seat, and a sink.

The full basement which has block walls is also interesting because of the northeast corner being occupied by two full storage lockers with built-in shelves enclosed by tongue-and-groove panel.
