The Schnering House is a picturesque example of the American Colonial revival. The exaggerated length of the house, the incredible number of window panes and the recessed dormers reflect the movements of the late nineteenth century when the several medieval revival styles were blended into the American Colonial-revival style.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Dating from the very end of the nineteenth century or very early in the twentieth, the SCHNERING HOUSE is a frame one and one-half storey house with a gambrel roof, its lower slopes very steep, its upper slopes rather shallow. Basically five bays in length, porches at either end beneath a continuous roof, each more than a bay in width, make this house seem exceeding long. Its principal facade is to the south; sloping grade allows the basement to open to the north at grade. Exterior walls are covered with painted wood shingles; the roof, formerly with wood shingles, is now covered with asphalt shingles. Dormer windows with 16/16 sash are recessed into the lower slope of the roof, their heads at the surface of the roof, their sills deeply recessed. Five such windows are above the five principal bays of the house and one is above each end porch; a smaller recessed dormer is on either side of the middle dormer. All dormers have louvred blinds. The principal entrance is centered in the south front and it is flanked by 12/12 sidelights. Typical windows of the first storey have 30/30 sash. Two second storey windows in each end gable have 24/24 sash. Opposite the principal entrance, in the north wall, is a 55/55 window while an adjacent window at mid-wall height, expressing the stair landing within, has 81/81 sash. All lights are quite small.

A wide central hall has a fireplace on its east wall and the principal stair is at the north end. Wide doorways open east and west to the principal rooms, two on either side. Interior detailing recalls the late eighteenth century Adamesque style.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The SCHNERING HOUSE is a picturesque example of the American Colonial-revival; its roof recalls a typical eighteenth century form and its interior detailing recalls that of the late eighteenth century. The exaggerated length of the house, the incredible number of window panes and the recessed dormers reflect the picturesque movements of the late nineteenth century when the several medieval revival styles were blended into the American Colonial-revival style.

This house was built in 1884 by Thomas Janney, who came to Maryland from North Carolina. Originally this was part of Stoneton Estate owned by Alexander Stump. The Janney's built this as a "live-in house" during the construction of the larger place, "Margaret Meadows". Thomas Janney, Jr., inherited the property, but after his death in 1921, complex litigation ensued. For a period of nearly 30 years the house remained empty. This added to the "haunted house" image which grew around the house.

Finally in January, 1955, C. Preston Scheffnacker became the owner, but in 6 months he sold the property to Osbourn P. Beall. Fred and Mae Klaunberg restored the house when they purchased it in 1957. The next and present owners are Philip and Ruth Schnering.
