FIFE-TAYLOR HOUSE/ SHUMAN HOUSE

1857-1876

MARYLAND LINE

PRIVATE

This is a large duplex house, covered with pebble-studded stucco, with large, single sheet sash windows, gable roof, and full-width front porch. The main facade is decorated with a dentilled cornice. This house presents a bright, fresh appearance, but it was probably extensively refurbished with materials characteristic of the Colonial Revival period. The basic house seems to date from some point between 1857, when the lot was vacant, and 1876, when the tax ledgers showed John Fife as owner of a house and lot worth $1,000. None of the tax records would suggest that Fife's original house was replaced. It appears in various atlases and Will Taylor was carried as owner in the 1918 tax ledger.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Fife-Taylor or Shuman House has been much refurbished with materials that have a Colonial Revival appearance, but evidence seems to make this a mid-19th century vernacular structure. This is a plain, frame duplex house, two stories plus attic, four bays wide. The twin entrances are set in the two inner bays; doors are paneled, protected by contemporary metal and glass storm doors. The entrances are topped by rectangular transoms. In the main block, windows are double-hung sash types, 1-over-1 layout. The porch is a full-width, wraparound type, shed-roofed on the ends, hip-roofed where it makes a right-angle turn. The porch deck is of wood, about a foot above grade. The roof is supported by seven round Doric columns. An architrave runs from the square block at the top of the capitals of the columns to the soffit of the porch roof.

The main facade is decorated with a dentiled cornice. The main roof is gabled, with overhanging eaves. Roofing material is rubber tile, grey in color. A row of ice hooks runs across the front roof a quarter of the way above the rain gutters. A plain inside end chimney of brick rises through the ridge line at the north (or right-hand) end of the house. The gable ends contain two square windows on the south end of the house, the window openings are filled on the west with louvers for ventilation, on the east and side nearest the street, with a window of four lights.

A low rear wing is attached to the main block; it is two bays deep, and its windows are smaller than those in the main block, contemporary in design and fitted with 1-over-1 lights. The foundation is of stone.

Outer covering of the entire house is stucco, studded with pebbles, which gives the structure a smart, neat appearance. A functional 1-story frame shed is tacked onto the house at its uttermost southwest corner.

The Taylors conveyed the property to Oscar R. Shuman in 1927, and in 1978, Shuman, a widower, conveyed to John H. and Henrietta W. Shuman. (8) The property has been reduced to a town lot by selling off the agricultural space west of the main street in 1969. (9)
