Description of Property and Eligibility Determination: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

3612 Washington Road is an example of a 1920s Colonial Revival style house. It is three bays wide with two bow windows and a center hall entrance. The exterior doorframe is a simple pediment. On the south side of the building is a sun room and on the north is a hipped-roof porch over a garage. All of the windows are double hung sashes with 8 over 8 lights. A characteristic building material of the neighborhood is the use of the yellow-to-cream color stone. The exterior stone is quarry-cut and laid in regular bond.

This house is a substantial structure, which may have been part of a development planned for the area. However, when St. Paul's Church was built, it acquired the house and has used it since the mid-1960s. The surrounding lots are either the church parking lot or are filled with houses and apartment complexes from the 1950s through 1970s. As a result, while the house has good integrity of materials and workmanship, its setting and location are lacking. It is our opinion that the house at 3612 Washington Road is not eligible for inclusion under Criterion C of the National Register of Historic Places. Further research indicates that it is not eligible under Criteria A or B. No research was done to determine eligibility under Criterion D.
