The Mary E. Neel House is a 5-bay, double pile, brick building which was constructed in 1842. It belonged to a prosperous Reisterstown farmer, Hugh Neel and his wife, Mary, who farmed the 25 acre farm behind the house. The building has interior chimneys, the brick is laid in common (American) bond, and the windows are 6 over 6 double hung sash. The single family dwelling is in good condition. Based on the information provided, the Mary E. Neel House is eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C, Architecture, as an excellent example of a mid-nineteenth century farmhouse.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Mary E. Neel House is a 5 bay, double pile, brick building which was constructed in 1842. It faces the Hanover Turnpike and was the home of a well-to-do Reisterstown farmer, Hugh Neel and his family, including his wife Mary.

The Neel house is constructed of brick, in American bond, with 6 over 6 windows in the first and second stories, and in the attic gable there are 2 square windows with six lights each. There are two interior chimneys and front and rear porches. The front porch has a brick foundation (as does the rest of the building), a flat roof supported by Doric columns and a decorative wooden porch railing. A low brick wall encloses the rear porch and screening and it too has a flat roof.

The building has a side gable roof of slate and a center hall plan. The building is similar to other late Federal-style buildings found in the Reisterstown area and exhibits some Greek Revival style elements, such as the porch supports.

Evaluation for:

National Register  Maryland Register  not evaluated

Prepare a one-paragraph summary statement of significance addressing applicable criteria, followed by a narrative discussion of the history of the resource and its context. (For compliance projects, complete evaluation on a DOE Form – see manual.)

The Mary E. Neel House is significant as an example of a late Federal/Greek Revival temple style building, used as a single family dwelling, from the second quarter of the nineteenth century. Once the home of a well-to-do Reisterstown farming family, it retains the exterior elements of the important architectural styles of the period, and thus is eligible for inclusion in the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C (Architecture).

Although the Federal architectural style began to be popular in the 1780s following the founding of the United States, in the rural areas, the style continued to be built through the 1840s. The incorporation of a temple style building into the domestic architectural forms throughout the country resulted in several variations. In New England, the house is frequently a front gable building, with as many as four Doric columns across the front supporting the porch roof. In the Mid-Atlantic Region, the side gable type is found, frequently as is the case at the Neel House, the porch does not cover the entire front façade of the building, but acts as a portico.

Reisterstown began in 1758 following John Reister's purchase of 20 acres on the Conewago Road. He and his family built an inn south of Westminster Road intersection. The town became a turnpike stop, as travelers headed west towards Westminster or north towards Pennsylvania. Farmers who lived near the town provided supplies for the travelers stopping at the town's inns. While the turnpike remained a major transportation route for horse drawn vehicles, the town was known for its travel related services. However, with the advent of first the railroad, Western Maryland Railroad, and then the trolley, United Electric Railway, in the 1890s, Reisterstown shifted its orientation to become the market center in the central northwest part of Baltimore County. The railroad and the trolley expanded the access to such villages and sites as Glyndon and Emory Grove, which in the twentieth century caused further development in and around Reisterstown. Reisterstown (BA-2212) has been listed in the National Register of Historic Places since 1978, and the town's architecture includes numerous excellent examples of mid-nineteenth century houses such as the Neel House.

Hugh Neel © 1800 and Mary E. Neel © 1810 were both born in Pennsylvania and Hugh farmed the land in the northeast quadrant of the Hanover Turnpike and Dover (now Butler) Road intersection. The census taker valued the 25+-acre farm in 1860 at $20,000. Also in the 1860 U.S. Census, Neel (also spelled Neal and Neil) is listed as age 60, Mary is listed as age 50, and they had five children living at home: James, Martha, Rebecca,

John and Joseph. Mr. and Mrs. Neel were not literate, which explains the different spellings of the surname over the years. The various County Atlases depict the development of the northeast quadrant.

In the 1850 J.C. Sidney map, Hugh Neel is identified as owning a house near the present intersection of 3rd Street and Neel Avenue, although the house at 7 Butler Road is not identified. On the 1877 Hopkins Atlas, Mary Neel is identified as residing at 7 Butler Road, and the original farmhouse is also listed as her property. In the 1915 Bromley Atlas, the Neels' youngest son, Joseph is identified as the owner of 7 Butler Road and no one is identified as living in the other house.<sup>1</sup>

Beginning in 1909, the Neels began to subdivide their property along Dover (now Butler) Road, and in 1912 and 1911 respectively, two more houses were constructed: 103 and 203 Butler Road.
