Although the property on which the circa 1840 dwelling stands has been owned and occupied by members of the Merryman family since 1976, the house appears to have been constructed and initially inhabited by members of the Withers and Morris families. The property, comprising 71.63 acres on which there are a dwelling and two historic outbuildings, is located to the east of York Road, once the major turnpike thoroughfare connecting Baltimore to York, Pennsylvania. The vernacular stone masonry dwelling represents the predominance of this type and material of domestic building construction throughout the first half of the 19th century in Maryland. The Withers-Morris House does retain sufficient integrity of location, setting, and material. However, it does not represent a rare building form and was substantially altered and enlarged in 1978.

The Withers-Morris House is a five-bay wide dwelling constructed circa 1840. The stone house is detailed with large stone quoins and brick surrounds. The current configuration is comprised of a two-and-a-half-story stone main block with a two-story addition and a one-story attached garage. The main block faces south and has a side gable roof clad in diamond-shaped concrete roofing tiles. It is adorned with a wooden cornice. The dwelling has two interior end brick chimneys with corbeled caps as well as an exterior end brick chimney in the addition. There is a one-story full-width shed-roofed porch across the facade. The structure is set into the hill, presenting a three-and-a-half-story rear elevation, which is accented by a two-story full-width porch and center gable with ornamental wood shingles. The house is located on Eagle Mill Road and is surrounded by rolling hills with two historic outbuildings and a barn foundation to the south. A circa 1980 office building is located on the property's driveway to the north of the main house.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Withers-Morris House is a five-bay wide dwelling constructed circa 1840. The vernacular stone house is detailed with large stone quoins and brick surrounds. The current configuration is comprised of a two-and-a-half-story stone main block with a two-story 1978 addition and a one-story attached garage. The main block faces south and has a side gable roof clad in diamond-shaped concrete roofing tiles. It is adorned with a wooden cornice. The dwelling has two interior end brick chimneys with corbeled caps as well as an exterior end brick chimney in the addition. There is a one-story full-width shed-roofed porch across the facade. The structure is set into the hill, presenting a three-and-a-half-story rear elevation, which is accented by a two-story full-width porch and center gable with ornamental wood shingles. The house is located on Eagle Mill Road and is surrounded by rolling hills with two historic outbuildings and a barn foundation to the south. A circa 1980 office building is located along the property's driveway to the north of the main house.

EXTERIOR DESCRIPTION

The primary facade, which fronts north, is five bays wide with a one-story porch. The porch is set upon a stone foundation, with chamfered wood posts supporting the shed roof. Square balusters accentuate the porch. A centrally placed single-leaf door provides access to the two-story stone dwelling. A two-light transom caps this six-paneled wood entry door. Two elongated 4/4 vinyl windows flank the entry on each side. The openings are detailed with square-edged wood sills and operable louvered shutters. Below the porch roof, the wall surface is stuccoed. The second story features five regularly spaced 4/4 vinyl windows with square aluminum-clad sills and wood lug lintels. The window openings on the second story are accentuated by brick quoins that are largely obscured by the shutters.

Located to the east of the main block is a two-story addition built in 1978. Recessed from the elevation, this addition has a side gable roof clad with asphalt shingles. It is clad in wood-grained aluminum siding, and rests on a concrete block foundation. A one-story, full-width shed overhang clad in asphalt shingles shades the first story. A tripartite window, comprising a central 8/12 window and 5-light sidelights, marks the first story. An aluminum surround and louvered shutters frame the opening. The second story has two 6/6 windows with aluminum surrounds and louvered shutters. An exterior end brick chimney with two chimney pots is located on the eastern elevation of the addition. A one-story, two-bay garage abuts the addition to the east side. Clad in wood-grained aluminum siding, the garage has two doublewide roll-up twelve-panel and three-light doors with narrow wood surrounds. The garage has an asphalt shingled side gable roof.

The banking of the dwelling into a steep hillside has resulted in the exposure of a three-and-a-half story west elevation. Each of the primary stories has two replacement 1/1 vinyl windows with wood sills covered in aluminum, wood lug lintels and brick quoins. The attic story has two 2/2 windows with wood lug lintels, wood surrounds and brick quoins.

The rear, or south elevation, also presents three-and-a-half-stories. It is accentuated by the addition of a central projecting gable with a molded wood cornice. The tympanum of the gable is clad in fishscale and cove wood shingles. Like the north elevation, the wall surface of the south elevation is finished with stucco on the first story and stone on the second story. A two-story full-width porch marks the ground and first stories. The porch has a shed roof clad in asphalt shingles, and is supported by chamfered wood posts with a decorative sawn balustrade. The ground story of the main block is obscured by the enclosure of the porch at this level. It has been enclosed by five one-light sliding metal doors divided by narrow piers. The first story has a central entry with a single-leaf entry holding a two-light and two-panel wood door adorned by a two-light transom. It is symmetrically flanked by four 1/1 vinyl windows with wood sills covered in aluminum and wood lug lintels. The second story has five similar windows with brick quoins. The gable peak has a 4-light fixed window set within a semi-circular arched opening. The window is framed by a molded wood surround and sill.

The 1978 two-story addition to the east has a raised concrete block foundation and is clad in aluminum siding. The first story projects beyond the plane of the wall to meet the depth of the porch on the main block. The ground level has two 1-light awning windows with square-edged wood sills. A tripartite window, comprising a central 8/12 window and 5-light sidelights, marks the first story. There is a paired 6-light casement window to the east. The second story has two evenly spaced 6-light casement windows.

The one-story adjoining garage is located to the east. It is constructed of concrete blocks with aluminum siding in the gable end. There are two one-light awning windows with square-edged wood sills and a single-leaf opening holding a sash-and-paneled wood door.

The east of the main block has aluminum cladding in the gable end. The addition has a 6/6 window with an aluminum surround and louvered attic story triangular vents flanking the chimney.

INTERIOR DESCRIPTION

The first story of the center-passage/single-pile plan main block features two parlors flanking a central stair/entry hall. Because of subsequent interior alterations, only one of the parlors retains its original configuration. The other parlor has been subdivided into a study, hall, closet, and powder room. The center-passage extends the depth of the house, connecting the front and rear porches. The stair retains its original configuration and is located in the main hall. The straight-flight stair has an open stringer with turned balusters and a turned newel post with a ball finial. The hall is detailed with six-inch baseboards topped by ogee molding caps. The hardwood floors have been carpeted.

The intact parlor is located to the west of the main stair. This parlor retains much of its original detailing, including wood square-edged baseboards, deep-set wood window casings with molded ogee sills, and molded door casings. The carved wood mantel has reeded pilasters, molded lintel, and applied turned wood brackets. The walls and ceiling consist of painted plaster, while the floors were carpeted over the original wood floorboards. There is one wood four-paneled door in the parlor with a metal lock box and wood-grained porcelain knobs.

The converted study is located in the southeast portion of the main block. A new wall was added to divide the space, carpeting was placed over the three to four inch wide floorboards, and a window on the west wall was infilled when the addition was added and the room became a study with built-in shelving. Despite the alteration, many of the original details remain intact, including the square-edged wood baseboards, the plaster walls and ceiling, the inset wood ogee molded window casings, and wood molded door casings. There is a wood six-paneled door with modern replacement hardware.

The northeast portion of the main block has been divided into a secondary hall, which leads to the addition, a closet, and a powder room. The inside of the façade wall retains its original inset ogee molded window casings while the subdivision walls have two-inch flush molded baseboards with ogee caps. The oak floors consist of twelve to thirteen inch boards, which were original location in the corncrib.

The second floor houses bedrooms in the original portion of the dwelling and in the addition. The original main block includes inset molded window sills, square-edged baseboards, and molded door surrounds. The addition has all modern detailing.

A finished attic, divided into two rooms with plaster walls and ceilings, encompasses the entire portion of the main block. The molded wood door surrounds are intact, as is some of the original 1870s style hardware and hinges. The floors are constructed with three-inch wood boards. A stovepipe is also present.

The late 1970s addition contains a living room and an eat-in kitchen. Modern two-inch wood baseboards and thin molded window and door casings are present. A geometrically patterned wood mantel was reused from another historic house. Wall to wall carpeting, dry wall ceilings and walls are also modern materials used in the construction of the addition. A modern kitchen is also present.

OUTBUILDINGS

The two-story, one-bay wide gable-fronted corncrib is constructed on a stone foundation and is clad in board and batten on the gable end and weatherboard siding on the sides. The roof is sheathed in wood shingles and appears to be rebuilt. It is finished with a wooden cornice and overhanging eaves. Circular saw marks and some hand-hewn beams exist. The floorboards were removed and reused in a hall in the main dwelling. Drive-through openings are present on the gable ends. A small fixed four-light window with a wood surround also exists in the gable end.

The stone foundations of a bank barn and a pigpen are also located on the premises.

The springhouse, constructed circa 1840, is has a coursed rubble stone structural system atop a coursed rubble stone foundation. The corners of the structure are anchored by large stone quoins. The front gable roof of the structure exhibits beams and rafters that are hand-hewn on two sides and other rafters are unhewn. A square ventilator with a pyramidal roof clad in wood shingles rises from the back of the roof. The one-and-a-half story, one-bay wide springhouse has a central entry with a wood lintel and a flush vertical board single-leaf door. The interior retains much of its original material. The troughs into which water was channeled and containers of milk or other perishables were placed to cool by running water are extant. Because springhouses were constructed at or very close to the water source, they were often built into the side or base of a hill where a spring emerged from the ground, as evidenced by the placement of this springhouse.

Although the property on which the circa 1840 dwelling stands has been owned and occupied by members of the Merryman family since 1976, the house appears to have been constructed and initially inhabited by members of the Withers and Morris families. The property, comprising 71.63 acres on which there are a dwelling and two historic outbuildings, is located to the east of York Road, once the major turnpike thoroughfare connecting Baltimore to York, Pennsylvania. The vernacular stone masonry dwelling represents the predominance of this type and material of domestic building construction throughout the first half of the 19th century in Maryland.

HISTORY

Although the exact date of construction for Nicholas Merryman House has not been determined, current tax records, historic maps, and architectural evidence support a circa 1840 date. The land on which the house was constructed in the mid-19th century was owned by Charlotte Withers as early as 1811, when she acquired the land from James Calder. The property is located just north of the Parkton, a small community along York Road. The dwelling appears on the 1850 map, and is labeled with the name L. Morris, who resided in and then later owned the house.

The materials, form, and modest ornament that characterize the dwelling are very representative of early to mid-19th century architecture throughout Baltimore County. The rubble stone walls and the five-bay wide, single-pile form are common to many domestic buildings in and around the area of Parkton. The most ornamental aspects of the dwelling are the dressed quoins that surround the window and door openings and the moderate to steep pitch of the side gable roof. In addition, the house reflects a certain amount of Gothic Revival style influences in the steeply pitched central gable on the back of the dwelling. The gothic revival style was made popular in the mid-19th century by Andrew Jackson Downing after he published pattern books that depicted Gothic Revival style dwellings in picturesque locations throughout the countryside. The accompanying springhouse, which dates to the period of the dwelling's initial construction, is also representative of through materials and form of springhouses throughout Baltimore County. Water, which continuously flowed through the springhouse, was usually channeled through troughs in the floor or sometimes through raised troughs. It exited through an opening at the base of the building. Containers of milk or other perishables were placed in the trough and cooled by the running water. The troughs of the springhouse at the Withers-Morris House are intact.

Parkton, the community near which the Withers-Morris House is located, is a mid-19th-century town located twenty-nine miles north of Baltimore City. Situated along the Northern Central Railroad, Parkton was home to 50 inhabitants in 1881 and at that time, was the center of a rich agricultural and trading region. The close proximity of Parkton to York Road and the railroad rendered the area as a center of trade.<sup>1</sup>

The property on which the house is situated on Eagle Mill Road, is located to the east of York Road. It is located on the western edge of the Sixth district, on the boundary with the Seventh election district, which was one of the largest and most populated regions of the county in the latter part of the 19th century. Pennsylvania bounds both districts to the north. In 1870, district six had an area of 30.05 square miles and a population of 2235, but it had grown to 2326 by 1881. The area historically consisted of rugged hills and valleys, traversed by major transportation corridors, such as the railroad and well maintained country roads<sup>2</sup>. Arable fields, located in the valleys, for plantings of wheat, corn, oats and fruits support the districts. It was known for its dairy production and the breeding of cattle. In addition the waterpower of the Gunpowder Falls and its tributaries supported numerous mills, including the largest paper mills in the state.

Prior to the organization of turnpikes in Baltimore County, many of the county's roads were considered unfit for use. Earlier efforts to incorporate turnpike companies originated from the county government, yet, by the turn of the 19th century, efforts to create better roads emanated from the state government's efforts to better serve the growing rural population. This action resulted in the laying of a road from Baltimore, Maryland to York, Pennsylvania that would replace the winding, indirect Old York Road.<sup>3</sup> The privately organized York Turnpike Company was incorporated in 1805. Work on the new road ceased in 1810, when the thirty-five miles of road from Baltimore to the Pennsylvania Line was completed. This route soon became one of the primary north-south corridors in Baltimore County. Taverns in Maryland Line, Wiseburg, Philopolis, and Timonium served travelers along the route.<sup>4</sup> In 1838, the Baltimore and Susquehanna Railroad Company began construction of a line that would run northward from Baltimore nearly parallel to the York Turnpike.

A parcel of land that appears to have included the dwelling was sold by Trustees for Charlotte Withers to Pleasant Hunter in 1867. In 1872, Hunter then sold the property to Francis A. Chilcoat, who appears to have rented the space to a Mrs. Taylor in the mid- to late 1870s, for the 1877 atlas of the county indicates that Taylor resides in the house. Deed research does reveal that the Morris family definitively held ownership and transferred the title to the Wilson family in 1892. The Wilson family also acquired additional property here in 1893 from Daniel Cameron. They then relinquished ownership in 1976 when the house was sold to Nicholas and Nell W. Merryman.

NICHOLAS MERRYMAN HOUSE - Before 1850 - Located 0.1 mile SE of Eagle Mill Road, entrance 0.2 mile NE of Walker Road. Probably the L. Lewis House of 1850 map. Shown as "Mrs. Taylor" property on 1877 atlas. Three-section house includes main block of stone, mid-section covered with aluminum siding, and a garage. Main block is two stories, five bays wide, with full-width front porch; second-story windows are small with 2-on-2 lights. Gable roofing on all segments; rubber roofing material in hexagonal pattern on main block. House set in a hollow. Owner: Nicholas B. Merryman.
