This two-story square-form framed and weatherboarded structure faces south onto Charles Street. It has six-over-one double-hung sash and a steep hipped roof with a short ridgeline that runs parallel to the facade. It is a double-pile structure with uneven fenestration that suggests two or three periods of construction. It is double-pile with interior brick chimneys. There is a one-story porch built onto the east side of the house and a one-story rear ell and shed. The building was constructed as a house -- probably in the early twentieth century. Recent changes have been associated with its new commercial function. Portions of the house are used as apartments. The original siding has been replaced.
