

La Veille House

ca. 18th. c.

Although remodeled and extended at various times since its original construction date the La Veille House remains today one of Calvert County's most attractive homes.

Originally three bays in length and gambrel roofed it had a pair of large end chimneys joined at the base by a one story brick pent. At a later date the house was extended at one end by two bays addition which also possesses a pair of external end chimneys. The first stage, however, still retains its early interior, much of it carved from local cypress.

One of the most interesting aspects of the La Veille farm is the approach which passes through a grouping of domestic dependencies which include a loom house, smoke house, ice house, and log quarters.

#7 Description (Continued)

In the attic the two outer walls (eave walls) are sheathed with flush beaded boards secured on the horizontal; the remaining wall surfaces are plastered. The only fireplace is in the southwest bedchamber and it has a simple molded surround; above it is a shallow built-in cupboard.

In the addition the room configuration is similar to that of the earlier part and the interior finishings are consistent in stylistic detail to the eighteenth century work.

As previously mentioned, the main stair was replaced in the early nineteenth century. It appears, however, that a previous stair occupied this same location.

The present kitchen is housed in an addition attached to the main house at the east end of the north end elevation. This part of the house constitutes a renovation of an earlier, late eighteenth or early nineteenth century kitchen. Its large chimney with an expansive fireplace opening and built-in cooking equipment is positioned back to back with the northeast chimney of the main house.

To the north end of the house have been added several comfortable and attractive porches.

A truly outstanding feature of this house and farm, aside from its very appealing setting, is a collection of early 19th century domestic dependencies. As a group they offer a unique visual introduction to the farm proper; their visual impact is such that they command almost as much attention as the main house. The La Veille Place is reached by an unpaved, semi-private, road of great length, and as the drive approaches the main house, it passes through the middle of this small complex offering one of such structures to a working eighteenth and nineteenth century farm. The dependencies, all of frame construction, include, among others, a log corn crib, three barns (one of which still houses its early nineteenth century tobacco prize equipment in excellent condition), several small sheds, and an extremely interesting frame house that was created by the joining together of two eighteenth century log slave quarters. (These two earlier log buildings were positioned with about ten feet between their ends. A frame connecting wing was inter-built in this area which then became the central stair hall of the existing structure. At each end of the house stand large stone chimneys with garretted mortar joints and free standing stacks. All of the existing interior detail of the two rooms and hall are of an early Greek Revival character. The stair rises in one flight to a landing and then branches into two flights with winders).

Between the "Quarters" and the main house is the La Veille family cemetery, enclosed within an elaborate late nineteenth century wrought iron fence.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

La Veille Place is located on land in St. Leonards Hundred first patented in 1651 and called Harwood. During the first half of the eighteenth century the Tasker family owned the tract, as well as additional lands in Calvert and other Southern Maryland counties. John Tasker (d. 1711) willed his "mansion house" in Calvert County to his wife but there is no physical or legal documentation to connect his "mansion house" with any part of the existing structure. The last Tasker owner, Colonel Benjamin Tasker, resided in Annapolis and maintained a "quarter" in Calvert County.

By mid-century, Harwood had been combined with another tract which, in turn had been divided among the Dukes and the Brooms, two substantial local families. A century later, the La Veille family had established themselves on the property and their descendents remained there until the mid-twentieth century.

While La Veille Place has been altered at various times, the present wing is actually a sympathetic replacement of an earlier addition that was, by the time of the mid-twentieth century restoration, in a ruinous condition. However, except for this enlargement of the initial house, the basic plan and detail of the original part has survived in much the same appearance as it was when first built. Because of the local architectural and historical significance associated with the La Veille Place and farm it is felt that these additions and alterations do not significantly alter its importance to Calvert County or to Southern Maryland. Of the 80 historic houses that have been recorded in Calvert County only a few of this number are known to be of an eighteenth century date and nearly all have been excessively altered and renovated. Therefore, the uniqueness of many of the interior details of the house, its original plan and exterior features, as well as the number of surviving early domestic dependencies (notable among them the "Quarters"), and the sylvan setting with panoramic views of the Battle Creek valley that this house retains, historic sites, worthy of recognition and preservation on both a local and state level.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

La Veille Place is located on the east bank of Battle Creek at the end of Ben La Veille Road about three miles west of Mutual, Maryland.

The one-and-one-half-story gambrel roofed main house is of brick, Flemish bond, construction. The principal (west elevation) facade is six bays in length with the main entrance door occupying the third bay from the southwest corner. Above, on the lower slope of the roof, are four evenly spaced shed roofed dormers. At each end of the house stand two exterior chimneys. The south end chimneys with staggered weatherings are connected at the base by a one-story brick pent, a typical feature of mid-and-late eighteenth century Southern Maryland architecture.

There are five buildings which are grouped together in a complex that encompasses both sides of the entrance road approximately seventy-five yards east of the main house. On the north side of the road are a carriage house and the oldest barn, while on the south side stands a newer barn, a shed, and a corn crib.

Corn Crib A

The corn crib is 18'6" long and 12'6" wide. The walls of the corn crib are of log construction and measure 4' between the sill log and plate log. The building is capped with a gable roof made of hewn timbers fastened together with cut nails. The gable-ends are covered with weather boards varying in width up to 14', the distance between the plate and ridge (center of plate to apex of gable) is 7'.

Barns

C is a relatively modern barn showing circular sawn materials joined with wire nails.. In D, however, hidden by additions is the frame of a much older barn. It is a true post-and-beam structure utilizing massive hewn timbers joined via mortise-and-tenon with trunnels. There are replacement pieces, however, the plates and sills are continuous. The side plates appear to be original and are 10" in thickness. The barn is eight rooms (c. 32') in length and an unusual 22' in width. (20' and 24' are more common). There are 10' between the plate and sill.

The siding would appear to be replacement stuff, even on those walls protected by shed additions. This fact is determined by the non-functional mortise in the plates and sills that indicate the building once had 2' studdings, the kind of which appears in nineteenth century barns that are covered with seven clapboards. The vertical siding which remains however, appears to be of same age. It is random width and one board on the north wall measures 23" wide. It appears to be poplar wood.

Stable E

According to the present owner this building was used as a carriage house, with a "garage" on the east side and a platformed or floored area on the west for stering gear. A difference in materials however, suggests that the tall gabled-end building may once have stood alone. This portion of the building is 12' and 24" deep. It has a post-and-beam frame with 2' studding inbetween that appears to be circular sawn. The posts are squared, and measure 6" in thickness. There are log joists in the floor and ceiling. Boards are simply laid across the ceiling joists to form a full second story room.

The roof is A-framed with rafters that are lap joined and fixed with cut nails.

Other Outbuildings

Mrs. Waters recalls a seperate kitchen, a meathouse, and a log quarters near the main house (on its north side) but they have been removed. There is a frame tenant house on the property which was not examined. The samller north wing of this building could be an earlier Ireland House structure.

The "Ireland House" was also examined June 2, 1977, and again on June 4, 1977. The National Register refers to this building as a "frame house that was created by the joining together of two eighteenth century log slave quarters." It is suggested that these two log houses were positioned with about 10' inbetween the west end of one and the east end of the other, and that a frame connecting wing was built which became the central hull of the present structure. This possibility has much credibility which is not contradicted at all by the fine decorative features present.

PARROTT'S CAGE has plain board ceilings on the two rooms of its first floor, but the fine old panelling was cut up long ago for firewood. This "seat" was built soon after 1652 by Wm. Parrott.

LA VILLE HOUSE has the flush pent between freestanding chimneys, a type common to St. Mary's County. The driveway in to this little gambrel roof house is nearly two miles long. It was a home of the La Veille family.

The second MANOR-HOUSE OF GREAT ELTONHEAD, built in the middle of the eighteenth century, had its panelled interior burnt out about 1880, leaving the mansion forlorn. The original manor house was the residence of Samuel Bourne before 1693. It was located at Drum Point and faced the Patuxent River. Samuel Bourne owned the 5000 acres of this Manor.*
