This house faces east onto an overgrown lane off Charles Street. The house is a heavily altered early twentieth-century gable-fronted bungalow. In the past few years it has been set onto a new concrete-block foundation. The front part of the house has been raised to two stories, and a modern rear ell has been built on. No original sash survive. There is one original interior brick stove flue. The original siding has been replaced with vinyl weatherboarding. There is a small modern gable-roofed out-building situated behind the house.
