The Enterprise
Goldsboro
Private

Second Quarter 19th Century

The Enterprise was constructed in the 1840's in a manner reminiscent of the earlier dwellings of the area. It, however, lacks the Flemish bond facade, but instead has a more developed fenestration and plan. There is a central stair hall flanked by two rooms, each room having two windows on the east facade. The uniformity of the walls is broken only by the windows for there is neither water table nor belt course.

Across three of the five bays is a full Doric portico which was added in the 1960's, along with an extension on the west side of the building.

Along with the portico the name of the farm is recent. The land was once the property of the Culbreath family.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Enterprise was built in the mid-nineteenth century and displays two major characteristics of the architecture in Caroline County during the late Federal period. It shows: (1) The general change in shape and form of the new houses, a more vertical emphasis caused by increased height and a steeper roof pitch; and (2) The conservatism of the architectural changes in the county shown in the continuing style, floor plan, fenestration, and restricted ornamental details from earlier periods. The addition of the portico and other remodeling is a reflection of some of the architectural notions contemporary to the time that it was done. (1960's)

The Enterprise is a name recently given to the property. It is located on a tract of land that once belonged to the Culbreath family.
