Circa 1860

Clinton Porter House is one of the greatest mid-19th century dwellings in Greensboro. It is an Italianate building with typical hip roof and five-bay facade, but the fluted pilasters at the corners have unique Ionic capitals not seen on another house in the area. Like most Italianate dwellings, there is a bracketed cornice. A small three-bay front porch has been enclosed which detracts from the original appearance.

 DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Clinton Porter's House is one of the greatest mid-19th century houses in Greensboro. It is located on the west side of the street in the first block south of the center of town.

The building is a five bay long, two story structure with an 'L' off the northwest side of the building. The walls are covered with weatherboard and the windows have 2/2 sash on the first story and 6/6 sash on the second story. Across three of the five bays is an enclosed porch which detracts from the lines of the house. At the corners of the building rise wide fluted pilasters with naive Ionic capitals, an unusual feature in this area. There is a bracketed cornice at the base of the low pitch hipped roof. From each end rises a brick chimney and on top is a platform, probably a widow's walk originally.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Clinton Porter's house is important architecturally as one of the few mid-19th century dwellings in Greensboro. It has a curious combination of features, in that the form and general outline of the building, as well as the cornice is typical of plainer Italianate farmhouses of the Eastern Shore, but the use of pilasters at the corners of the structure is unique in Caroline and more appropriately would be part of Federal design.
