Walter M. Arrington Farm
Sykesville (vicinity)

Summary:

The Walter M. Arrington Farm came into the Arrington family when it was purchased in January, 1896 by Albert F. Arrington for $1,700. He in turn sold it in 1897 to Walter M. Arrington of Carroll County for $1,725. Walter Arrington set about rebuilding the farm. The culmination of this flurry of improvements may very well have been the construction of the existing house in the period 1910-17. In 1917, the dwelling alone was worth $1,250. The new house was a blend of typical Carroll County features - especially the three-room plan with a center passage - and national influences such as the bay window, central gable dormer, and decorative patterns of shingles. The Arrington farm house has unusually rich decorative shingle work. The house, which is the only historic structure that survives on the farm, is scheduled for demolition.

Summary:

Contributing Resources: 1

The Walter M. Arrington Farm is located at the peak of a rather tall, steep-sided hill on the southeast side of Brangels Road. It is about 2½ miles east of Sykesville in southeastern Carroll County, Maryland. The house faces northwest, toward Brangels Road. It is a 2½-story, three-bay by two-bay frame structure with a rubble stone foundation. The original German siding was covered. The gable roof has asphalt shingles and a northeast-southwest ridge. The northwest elevation has a center entrance. There are side-lights and a three-light transom. Most of the window sash are missing or are boarded over. They were originally 2/2 double-hung sash. There is a central gable wall dormer that has diamond-pattern wood shingle siding. Over each end bay is a smaller gable-roofed dormer. The southwest elevation has a two-story, projecting hexagonal bay. It appears to be a balloon frame structure with circular-sawn studs and lath. The double-pile house is laid out with a center passage only one room deep. There is one large room to the southwest, a room in the north corner, and a room in the east corner that extends behind the center passage. The center passage has a straight run of stairs on the southwest. The attic story is finished, with plastered walls throughout. The house and all outbuildings are scheduled for demolition for a new subdivision.

The Walter M. Arrington Farm is located at the peak of a rather tall, steep-sided hill on the southeast side of Brangels Road. It is about 2½ miles east of Sykesville in southeastern Carroll County, Maryland. The farm complex consists of a frame house with an addition, a collapsed wood shed, and a collection of CMU outbuildings.

The house faces northwest, toward Brangels Road. It is a 2½-story, three-bay by two-bay frame structure with a rubble stone foundation. The original German siding was covered by green hexagonal asphalt shingles, which were in turn covered by brick-pattern asphalt shingles. The gable roof has asphalt shingles and a northeast-southwest ridge. The northwest elevation has a center entrance with a four-panel door that has narrow ogee panel moulds. There are side-lights with three lights over one panel, and a three-light transom. The door frame has a beaded interior edge.

Most of the window sash are missing or are boarded over. They were originally 2/2 double-hung sash, with beaded interior-edge frames and wood sills. There was one on each side of the center doorway, and three on the second story. The house has a denticulated box cornice. There is a central gable wall dormer that has diamond-pattern wood shingle siding and a dentil cornice in the raking eave. This dormer has a 2/2 sash with a pointed-arch top sash. The dormer has a gable roof with a northeast-southwest ridge and asphalt shingles. Over each end bay is a smaller gable-roofed dormer with a 2/2 sash and sawtooth-pattern shingles above. The sides of the dormers have diamond-pattern wood shingles. On either side of the central dormer, at the ridge, is a brick chimney. There is a lightning rod on each end of the house, on the ridge, with a twisted copper rod running along the ridge and down the northwest side of the roof, near the north and west corners, to the ground. It is connected to the roof and the northwest elevation by glass insulators. There was formerly a three-bay, one-story porch with a shed roof. It extended only to the outer jambs of the end windows.

The southwest elevation has a boarded-up window opening in the center of the foundation. On the first story there is a door opening in the west bay with a beaded-interior-edge frame; the door is now gone. There is a gable-roofed porch with a northeast-southwest ridge and a segmentally-arched soffit of beaded-edge boards. It has new steel posts and a new stone deck and steps. Above it, on the second story, is a window opening. The south bay has a two-story, projecting hexagonal bay with a wide window opening on the southwest elevation and narrow window openings (the size of those on the northwest elevation) on the sides of the bay. The foundation of the bay is rubble fieldstone and the roof has flat-seam metal. There is a denticulated box cornice and pent roof at the eave line, with asphalt shingles over wood shingles. The gable end has two window openings. It is finished with seven courses of plain butt wood shingles, four courses of clipped-corner shingles above them, then four courses of diamond-pattern shingles, one course of plain butt shingles, and ten courses of staggered butt shingles. There is also a dentil cornice on the raking eave.

The southeast elevation is also three bays. The central door on the first story is missing, but has a beaded interior-edge frame. There is a 2/2 sash in the south bay, a boarded-up opening south of the east bay, and a projecting, enclosed one-story wing on the east bay with a boarded-up window on the southeast. There is a one-story porch across the southeast elevation with a shed roof that has inverted-V-seam metal. The porch is now screened. The second story has three boarded-up windows. The box cornice is denticulated. The end bays have dormer windows matching those on the northwest end bays.

The northeast elevation has two 2/2 sash on each story and a dentil cornice with a pent roof. The gable end is identical to that on the southwest. There are later shed-roof additions on the east corner.

The cellar is one room and is unfinished. The first story joists are 2 by 8, spaced 24 inches on center, and are circular-sawn. The house is laid out on a center passage, modified double-pile plan, with one room on the southwest. The passage is only as deep as the north room, and the southeast room extends southward behind the passage. The window and door surrounds throughout the house have a field on the outer edge, then an ogee, two beads, a cavetto, another field, and a beaded interior edge. There are bulls-eye corner blocks. The baseboards have a wide bead, with a narrow bead on the top. The plaster walls are for the most part covered in recent panelling. It appears to be a balloon frame structure with circular-sawn studs and lath.

The double-pile house is laid out with a center passage only one room deep. There is one large room to the southwest, a room in the north corner, and a room in the east corner that extends behind the center passage. The center passage has a straight run of stairs on the southwest with a closed stringer. The square newel post has chamfered corners, three reeds on each face, and a ball on the top with one annulet around the center of it. The turned balusters have a center ring with two annulets around it on each side. The balusters are wire nailed to the moulded hand rail, which is constructed in five pieces and wire-nailed to the newel post. The flooring is 3 inches wide and runs northwest-southeast.

The north room has a four-panel door with ogee moulds from the passage. There is also a doorway on the southeast. The south corner has a corner chimney for a stove only. The 2½-inch wide pine floor runs northeast-southwest. The southeast room has tongue-and-groove vertical board wainscot, but none of the chair rail survives. The surrounds in this room originally had dark varnish. There is a four-panel door on the southeast into the projecting room, which has the same surrounds as the rest of the house. There is a door to the cellar on the northwest wall, at the west end. The surround has no corner blocks; the trim is carried all the way across the top. North of this door is a door to the center passage. Just north of the latter door is a ceiling beam that runs northwest-southeast across the room. There is also a door on the southwest wall to the southwest room. This room has a later stone fireplace centered on the northeast wall. It, too, has a ceiling beam, running northeast-southwest, roughly in the center of the room.

The second story has a small bathroom with a claw-foot tub on the southeast end of the center passage. There are four rooms ranged around the center passage. The south chamber has 3½-inch wide flooring running northeast-southwest. There is a drop ceiling and a later covering on the walls. A closet with a four-panel door is on the northwest elevation, to the north. The east chamber has 3-inch wide flooring running in the same direction. It also has a closet on the southeast wall, to the east. It also has 3-inch wide flooring and a drop ceiling. The west chamber has 3-inch wide flooring and a closet on the southeast wall, to the south. The surrounds here have dark varnish. The second story has plain baseboards. The center passage has 3-inch wide flooring, too. The square newels have bellcast wood caps. The stairs to the attic are enclosed.

The attic story is finished, with plastered walls throughout. It has a center passage with the same balusters and hand rail. There is a closet on the southeast end of the passage. The same surrounds are used here, but with mitered corners instead of corner blocks. They are light varnished natural wood. There is one room on the southwest. The interior side surround has plain corner blocks, and the window trim uses the same surround, but the top trim laps the side trim. There is an original closet in the north corner of this room. It is large and built into the room, and has a home-made ladder into the attic. The east room has a mantle piece on the northwest wall, but never had a fireplace. It is natural wood, apparently never finished, and has chamfered corners on the vertical pieces. The north room uses the same surrounds, but with butted corners. The attic joists are 2 x 7³/₄, spaced 24 inches on center, and circular-sawn. The rafters are 2 x 4, also 24-inch spacing, and circular sawn. They are mitered at the ridge, with no ridge pole.

About 20 feet northeast of the house is a collapsed wood shed with a circular-sawn frame, vertical board siding, and a gable roof with asphalt shingles and a northwest-southeast ridge. The foundation is terra cotta blocks. The 2 x 4 circular-sawn rafters are mitered at the ridge and support board sheathing. The shed is open on the southeast end.

East-southeast of the house about 100 feet is the stone foundation wall of what was probably a bank barn with a southeast-facing forebay. Southeast of it is a later gambrel-roof barn with CMU walls.

The house is surrounded by a line of trees about 40 to 50 feet northwest of the house, and by similar lines about 25 feet southwest and northeast of the house. Several of the trees are identified as Norway Maples. The house and all outbuildings are scheduled for demolition for a new subdivision.

The Walter M. Arrington Farm came into the Arrington family when it was purchased in January, 1896 by Albert F. Arrington for $1,700. The 77-acre parcel had improvements valued at only $600, according to the tax assessment, indicating either that they were old and deteriorated or otherwise insubstantial. Albert Arrington sold the farm to Joshua Arrington of Baltimore City, who in turn sold it in 1897 to Walter M. Arrington of Carroll County for $1,725. Walter Arrington set about rebuilding the farm. In 1898 there was a carriage house worth $50. A year later a wagon shed and other buildings, worth another $300, had been added. By 1903 a new barn assessed at $800 graced the farm. Arrington also added land; 25 acres in 1900 and another 31 by 1915. In 1898 his livestock was worth $235. By 1910 it had climbed to $700.

The culmination of this flurry of improvements may very well have been the construction of the existing house in the period of 1910-17. Though no mention is made of the addition of the house, in 1910 all of the improvements are valued at $1,450, while in 1917 the dwelling alone was worth $1,250. In addition, there was a second dwelling noted in the tax books, worth $300, that was later crossed out, as though it was the old house that was eventually demolished. The new house was a blend of typical Carroll County features - especially the three-room plan with a center passage - and national influences such as the bay window, central gable dormer, and decorative patterns of shingles. These trends begin to show up in the late nineteenth century in towns in Carroll County, but are rarely seen in farm houses until the twentieth century. The Arrington farm house has unusually rich decorative shingle work.

The farm apparently passed out of the family during the Depression and was cobbled together with another, before being acquired for development. The house, which is the only historic structure that survives on the farm, is scheduled for demolition.
