The property known as the Lyman Arnold House is located on the south side of Hook Road, just outside the suburban sprawl and southeast of Westminster, Carroll County, MD. The property, a dairy farm consisting of an early 20th-century dwelling, a large dairy bank barn and associated agricultural buildings, is not considered eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places.

The primary dwelling, built in the first decades of this century, is a two-story, five-bay, ell-shaped frame dwelling with a central gable. The house is covered with a cross gable roof with closed gable ends and interior end chimneys, and features a wrap-around front porch. The dairy barn, built in the early to mid-20th century is a large bank barn clad with vinyl siding and located east of the main dwelling. A concrete block building is attached to its south side, and number of wire or concrete silos are located behind and/or to the east of the house and barn.

The dwelling and its associated resources lack the architectural distinctiveness to qualify for listing on the National Register under Criterion C. The property is not known to have any associations with persons or events significant to our past, and is thus not eligible under Criteria A or B.

Documentation on the property/district is presented in: Review and Compliance Files

Lyman Arnold House
Continuation Sheet 7.1

Description

This early twentieth century farm is located on the south side of Hook Road in the rural area just outside of the sprawl of suburbs to the southeast of Westminster, Carroll County. Noted as the Lyman Arnold property in 1916, with 36 acres, it is a modest dairy operation with a large cattle barn loafing shed, numerous silos and sundry concrete block structures, which are tightly clustered with the residence on the south side of Hook Road.

The residence is a typical frame rural farmhouse of the early twentieth century, with a standing seam metal gable roof paralleling the principal north elevation. A broad cross gable is centered over the transomed and sidelight doorway, and has paired windows. The mostly one over one fenestration is regular on all four elevations. An ell extends to the south, continuing the plane of the west elevation of the principal block. The chimney on the west is located outside of the gable end wall, whereas the one on the east is inside. A one-story porch extends the full width of the principal elevation, wrapping around both the east and west elevations one bay deep. Most of the original windows have been replaced by one-over-one lights, and the dwelling has been clad in vinyl siding.

A large dairy bank barn, clad with vinyl siding, is located east of the dwelling, with the gable end perpendicular to Hook Road. A concrete block building is attached to its south side, and a two-story structure on the southeast corner, with a largely enclosed loafing barn and fenced enclosure in turn attached to its southeast corner. A number of wire and concrete silos, along with low concrete block equipment sheds, are located behind and/or to the east of the house and barn.

Lyman Arnold House
Continuation Sheet 8.1

Significance

This modest dairy farm is an undistinguished entity, and does not retain the variety of agricultural and domestic outbuildings which are typical for Carroll County farms even as late as the early twentieth century. In its present form, with modern concrete block buildings, and frame buildings which have been vinyl sided, this site does not convey a strong association with the past.
