447 Crowl Road, Union Mills Vicinity

Summary:

The Frock-Burgoon Farm has a very complicated history, as it consists of portions of several parcels that were combined, divided, and re-combined in changing configurations. The buildings rest on part of an 85 acre farm purchased by Peter Lookingbeal in 1837. In 1862 30 acres of this tract were placed under the control of a trustee who sold the land the following year to John Frock of John. The purchase price was $530, or $17.67 an acre. No advertisement or description of the property could be located. In 1867 John Frock was sued in circuit court and a Sheriff's sale of several properties, including this one, was the result. The advertisement for this sale made no mention of improvements, but Sheriff's sale ads are often frustratingly vague. Frock was not living on this parcel, but along the Baltimore and Reisterstown Turnpike near Joshua Wisner's Hotel. Both the hotel and Frock's home can be located on the 1862 map, just north of this site. Unfortunately, the court records could not be located to shed any more light on the property.

Description

The Frock-Burgoon farm is located at 447 Crowl Road, approximately 12 miles southeast of Union Mills, in north-central Carroll County, Maryland. The farm sits at the north end of a long, private drive and sits in a natural bowl. The ground slopes down from the northeast to the southwest and the buildings are set close to the lowest point, although the ground continues to drain down to the west. The ridge lines are covered with trees. The complex consists of a log house and a frame bank barn.

The house is banked on the north with an exposed foundation on the south elevation. It is a two-story, three-bay by two-bay log structure with a rubble stone foundation, aluminum siding, and a gable roof with inverted v-seam metal with an east-west ridge. On the south elevation, the porch is enclosed at the lower story. The west end has CMU's. The east-end wall is parged. On the first story, there is a center entrance with a four-paneled door and a six-over-six sash to either side. There is a one-story, three-bay porch that wraps around on the east. On the south, the porch is supported by five square wood posts and has a shed roof of standing-seam metal. The second story has a six-over-six sash in each end bay, with no opening in the center. There is a box cornice, and an interior brick chimney between the center and east bays.

On the east elevation, the foundation area below the porch is enclosed and this wall is parged. The first story has a six-over-six sash in the south bay and a six-paneled door in the north bay. The top two panels are glazed. The northeast corner of the porch is enclosed and has a vertical-board door on the south elevation. The second story of the east elevation has two six-over-six sash, and the gable end has a vent that appears to be placed over top of a four-light sash. There is a one-story wing on the rear, or north, elevation that is a more recent addition. It is a two-bay by one-bay structure with a CMU foundation and a gable roof of asphalt shingles with a north-south ridge. There are no openings currently on the north elevation of the main block, above this wing. On the west elevation, the foundation has a six-over-six sash in the center with beaded-edge-and-center vertical-board shutters. The first and second stories each have two six-over-six sash and the gable end has a vent in the center.

The cellar is divided into two rooms. The west cellar has a fireplace on the east elevation that has straight jambs and traces of plaster. There is no evidence of a crane. The south elevation has vertical posts beneath a sill that is hewn on all four sides. The first story joists are tenoned into the sill. The exterior of this south elevation, which was formerly exposed before the area beneath the porch was enclosed, has flush-board siding and beaded-edge vertical-board shutters hung on cast iron butt hinges. The west cellar has beaded-edge-and-center vertical-board half wainscot on the south elevation and the ceiling. Both cellars are plastered.

The first floor plan appears to have originally been three rooms: one on the east and two on the west. The east room does not have a fireplace but simply a flue on the west elevation. The stairway has been altered. Originally there was a winder stair in the northwest corner of this room that led both to the cellar and up to the second story and attic. The west room has no distinguishing features. The stairway comes up into the east chamber. The wall between the east and west chambers is of sash-sawn studs that are approximately 2 by 4's. The west chamber has a more finished floor.

The building is constructed with log walls and there are corner posts in three corners. The fourth corner could not be observed. The building was undergoing renovation, with much of the original lath and plaster being removed. The lath was laid vertically and fastened with cut nails. It is circular-sawn lath. The logs beneath are reused and there are some v-notch corners set at the edges of the windows. These logs were tenoned into the corner posts and pegged. The logs from adjacent walls are set level with each other at the corner, rather than staggered, and every other log is pegged on one elevation. Presumably, every other log is pegged on the opposite elevation so that the pegs alternate, however, this could not be observed. The top south and north logs overlap the corner posts. There are traces of whitewash on some of the logs, but the chinking is not whitewashed. The window and door openings have plain mitered architraves. The joists are sash-sawn and are approximately 2 by 6's. The rafters are hewn and are approximately 3 by 3's with a ridge pole. The rafters appear to be slightly tapered, being a little bit wider at the feet, and have a false plate with a bird's mouth cut at the foot to lap over the false plate.

About one hundred feet east of the house is a bank barn with a forebay that faces southeast and a ramp on the northwest side. The barn has rubble stone on the lower story with new horizontal siding on the southeast elevation of the lower story. It also has beaded-edge-and-center vertical-board siding on the upper story and a gable roof of inverted-v-seam metal with a northeast-to-southwest ridge. On the southeast elevation, the lower story has a large centered door on rollers with an opening to each side. The upper story has center double doors set above another pair of double doors. There are two wood vents to each side. The south-center and east-center vents each have a four-light sash at the bottom.

The northeast elevation of the barn is somewhat overgrown on the lower story, but appears to have one or two openings there. The upper story gable end has an opening, and the bottom sash survives. It has four lights, but the upper sash is now gone. There is a wood louver to each side of the sash and a pediment set above it. There are holes in the siding and flashing near the eave suggesting some kind of shed was originally attached to this side. On the northwest elevation, the upper story has center double wagon doors on machine-made strap hinges. There is a wood vent to the north and a vent with a four-light sash at the bottom of it to the west. On the southwest elevation, the lower story has two four-over-four sash. The upper story has three bipartite wood-louvered vents and a door set at the west end. The gable end has a four-over-four sash with a wood louver to each side and a pediment above.

The lower story has a summer beam that is circular sawn on all four sides. The summer beam runs northeast to southwest and is set roughly in the center. There is an extra summer beam very close to the northwest wall. The joists rest on the second summer beam and on the foundation, however, the joists are tenoned into the center summer beam with a center tenon. The joists are circular sawn on top and bottom. The southeast or forebay wall is of frame and appears to be primarily original beneath the later siding. The upper story of the barn has a center threshing floor with a hay mow to each side and a granary in the west corner. There are four mortised and tenoned and pegged braced bents, each bent having four posts each, and a queen post trust supports the roof structure. Most of the timber is circular sawn, though there are several hewn braces that are probably reused timber. Each bent has down braces from the lower girt down to the joists in the end bays. There are sawn rafters that are mitered at the ridge and support lath.

The Frock-Burgoon Farm has a very complicated history, as it consists of portions of several parcels that were combined, divided, and re-combined in changing configurations. The buildings rest on part of an 85 acre farm purchased by Peter Lookingbeal in 1837. In 1862 30 acres of this tract were placed under the control of a trustee who sold the land the following year to John Frock of John. The purchase price was $530, or $17.67 an acre. No advertisement or description of the property could be located. In 1867 John Frock was sued in circuit court and a Sheriff's sale of several properties, including this one, was the result. The advertisement for this sale made no mention of improvements, but Sheriff's sale ads are often frustratingly vague. Frock was not living on this parcel, but along the Baltimore and Reisterstown Turnpike near Joshua Wisner's Hotel. Both the hotel and Frock's home can be located on the 1862 map, just north of this site. Unfortunately, the court records could not be located to shed any more light on the property.

William Burgoon purchased several of the Frock properties in September 1867 and deeded this small farm to John Frock's wife, Matilda, in March 1868. The purchase price was now $1,000 or $33.33 per acre. In a five year period the Frock's almost doubled the price they paid for the farm, suggesting that perhaps there were no buildings on it when they first purchased it, and that the house was added by them. There are several features of the house which would suggest a later date of construction, in the 1850's or 1860's. The use of 6/6 sash has been observed in Carroll County at least up to 1870. The logs in the walls are re-used, with v-notch corners surviving at the edges of windows. The logs might have come from anywhere, but they were in good enough condition to be used again from an earlier structure. When they were re-used, the original cornering was not used. Instead this house has corner posts. Several other corner post structures have been documented, and it is believed that these may represent a late trend in log construction, possibly a transition from log to box framing.

One example is the Stephan-Sullivan Farm (CARR-1556) which was probably built c. 1852-66, and the Bish Family Farm (CARR-1580). The chinking here is not whitewashed, indicating that the lath and plaster is the original interior finish. The lath is circular sawn. This did not become readily available until after 1840, and by the early 1850's was the only lath used. The rafters use a ridge pole which is a very rare feature before 1860; most examples occur in the towns, and it does not become common in farm houses in Carroll County until the advent of balloon framing in the 1880's and 1890's. Of course, this could be an early roof replacement, as storms often took off roofs. While there is nothing conclusive, there is at least the strong suggestion that this house is from the early 1860's.

The Frocks expanded the farm by adding more land: a 4 acre parcel in 1866 and 34 ½ acres in 1877. Perhaps to finance the last purchase they took out a mortgage on their property, and again got into financial trouble. The farm, now 69 acres, was sold by a trustee in November 1884. The sale ad simply noted that it was "...improved with a very comfortable Log House, Barn..." The farm was purchased by John W. H. Burgoon, and like the Frock's before him, Burgoon probably used it as a rental property; When he sold it in 1904, Burgoon had moved to Baltimore City. The property changed hands frequently in the twentieth century. The barn is constructed of circular-sawn timber which would generally date it after 1890.
