CARR-214 Daniel Sullivan House
3348 Uniontown Road

The heirs of Earhart Cover sold 3348 Uniontown Road to Daniel Sullivan for $900 in 1816. The price indicates that there were substantial improvements on the site at that time. Daniel Sullivan was a blacksmith who operated a shop on the property. The property was later owned by Frederick Devilbiss (1843), Jacob Smith (1852), Hashabiah Haines (1866), and William McCollum (1866). Dr. Weaver states that blacksmiths who ran the shop after Sullivan were Frederick Devilbiss, Robert Duncan, William Zepp, William McCollum, and Francis Bowersox. The house appears in the 1837 tax assessment as a log structure, and the proportions and design of the house today reflect the design of the early structure. The ornamental window frames and porch details are of a style found in several other Uniontown houses and date from the mid-nineteenth century. The porch is an especially good example of the Victorian-period's use of curves as ornamental motifs. Here the eaves and brackets have elaborate curvilinear designs that are matched by the cut-out patterns below the railing. This house, like many in Uniontown, had a log cucumber pump in front of it until the early twentieth century.
