Pleasant Meadow

~~Old Stone~~ Schoolhouse c. 1850 is a 1½ story three bay by three bay rectangular weatherboard frame schoolhouse on the northwest corner of Route 273 and Stephens Road. The structure faces south with the main gable running north/south.

The structure rests on a fieldstone foundation and is sheathed with novelty siding and covered with a medium sloped composition tile roof with extended eaves and exposed rafter ends.

The south facade consists of a central entrance with flanking single pane sash windows. A double 6/6 sash window lights the second floor. The first floor has been covered by a shed roof porch supported by tapered square piers that rest on stone plinths. A square stick balustrade stretches between each post.

The east and west sides are pierced by three 6/6 sash windows with later shutters. The windows have been made smaller to accomodate modern sash. A stove stack rises against the exterior wall.

The north end is primarily covered by a shed addition.

The interior has been extensively remodeled to accomodate a residence since the educational use for the structure ended in the early 20th Century.

No. 1 - The early residents of Rising Sun and surrounding community obtained their education at the old Stone school a short distance east of the town on the road to Brick Meeting House. It was built in 1780 and stood for 116 years as a monument to its builders. It had 18 desks each seating two and sometimes three pupils. In this schoolhouse the Methodists held their meetings before the first church was built in Rising Sun in 1854.

The Stone school was torn down in 1896 despite vigorous protests and replaced by a two-room frame building which was given the name of Pleasant Meadows. It stands on the northwest corner of the intersection of Maryland 273 with the road to Farmington.

The school was closed in May 1920, sold to Clement D. Way for $785 on August 24, 1920, and converted into a dwelling.
