According to local tradition, the log building on Clarwyn Farm was constructed around 1775. The fenestration would indicate that there were two separate dates of construction. One side of the building is two bays long and a center door and the other side is three bays long including a center door. Both sections are the same depth and are two full stories covered with an "A" roof. The building is covered with clapboard and the trim appears to have been added with the clapboard. Two small brick chimneys are contained within the gable ends. There is a leanto porch on each facade of the building.
