The second dwelling south of Second Street is a three bay long, two story frame structure built upon a stone foundation. Its walls are covered with grey asbestos siding, the trim is painted white and the roof is raised seam tin. A brick chimney is located within the south gable.

The facade of the building has three equally spaced windows on the second story with wide plain trim typical of the late 19th century. Below are two windows, and a vacant spot which formerly was the entrance. Due to its proximity to the street, the door was moved to the north gable end of the building.

Behind the main part of the house is nearly equal size addition with leanto porches on each side, part of which appear to be enclosed.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Horsey-Layman House represents the typical three bay vernacular frame dwelling of Chesapeake City built throughout its 19th century growth.

This house was once a part of Captain Firman Layman's estate. Since that time it has had several owners. It is a single family house like the houses on either side of it and has always been a dwelling. Firman Layman probably built it as a tenant house.
