This is a large very monumental Georgian house. It is five bays long and four deep. It has a huge steeply pitched A-roof and a chimney built into each end of the house. There is a central door with a segmental arch. The first story windows are 12/12 sashes with segmental arches. The second story windows are also 12/12 sashes with no arches visible (they abut flush against the cornice). The cornice is simply moded and has a row of simple modillions. There is a water-table of cyma curve brick. The Flemish bond brick is carefully mortared with a grapevine joint. There is a three string belt course around the house between the first and second stories. There are random glazed headers throughout the brickwork. The interior plan is a central hall with two rooms on either side with corner fireplaces.

There is a three bay wide 2-~~3~~ story wing of common bond brick to the right of the main house. There is much old boxwood planted around the property.

This noble old mansion has been beautifully preserved and is a very notable Georgian house. George Washington ^{may have} stopped here on his travels through Maryland, as he mentioned viewing ^{dined with} Mr. Heath
