The Wright House is a two and a half story frame dwelling very similiar to the Witman House next door. It is covered with clapboard and is supported by a stone foundation. It is three bays long by two deep with a two and a half story rear wing. The house has a gable roof with a slight hip at each gable end which replaces a barge board as seen on most other late 19th century homes in Zion. The main portion of the house is shaped like a L. The house has a one story bay window on the east gable end which has decorative pierced gingerbread on top of its roof. This feature is carried over to the front porch. The porch is two bays long and one story in height with chamfered support posts and curved brackets. All of the windows on the first two stories are double windows. Those on the first story have paneled shutters and the second story windows have lowered shutters. The attic or half story windows are single windows with curved decoration on the frames. In the gable ends of the upper story there is board and batten siding with a sawtooth design on the lower edge. The roof is covered slate shingles with an interior brick chimney in the rear part of the house. The entrance to the house is located in the central bay of the facade and has a transom over it.

Also on the property is a small privy a carriage shed, and a small barn with corn crib.
