

Harlan-Magraw House
CE-915
Richardsmere
Destroyed

C. 1860

The Magraw House no longer stands along the north bank of the Octoraro Creek at the crossing known as Porter's Bridge. A mill complex, which included the house, a frame grist mill, and wagon sheds were located along the north bank as depicted by ^{the} Lake, Griffing, and Stevenson Atlas. (1877) Harry S. Magraw purchased the property in 1864 from John and Margaret Harlan for $9,300. (WHR 7/112). The tract is called "Steels Resurneyed" and patented to the Harlans in May of 1835.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

Harlan
 The McGraw House c. 1870 is a 2½ story balloon frame I-House located just south of Route 1 and immediately west of the Octorara Creek. The house is on the south slope of a hill and faces south toward the creek. The primary gable runs east/west.

The main block is a typical three bays across by one room deep with a central hall. A L extension is attached on the north side. The house has not been lived in and has been extensively vandalized in the recent past. The structure rests on coursed stone foundation and is sheathed with narrow weather boards. The slate roof has a steep pitch. Single story porches are found across the front of the structure and in the corner of the ell. The porches have square posts, decorated brackets and slate roofs.

The main facade is 3 bays across with the entrance in the center bay. Sidelights flank the door and a transom is overhead. A single lower panel is found below each sidelight. The windows are 6/6 sash with beaded trim and louvered shutters. The second floor windows have been removed. There is a attic window in the front cross gable. Interior end chimney with clay chimney pots are found on each gable end.

The rear addition is two bays across by one room deep. It has the same detailing as the main block.

The interior has been vandalized extensively but a few 4 panel doors with 19th century molded trim remain. Small mantels with plain pilasters and undecorated frezes were found lying in the front parlors.

SIGNIFICANCE The house is not very significant in its decrepit state and will eventually disappear. The house originally, according to local residents, was quite elaborate and until recently in excellent shape. The house was probably built by the late 19th century mill owner due to its close proximity to the mill.
