

CH-201
Norris House, ruin
Ripley
Private

c. 1840

Long in a state of advancing deterioration and recently burned, this typical Federal house was of frame construction, two stories in height, and had a hall and double parlor floor plan. At the east end stood two exterior chimneys. Later additions were built at both ends. The interior woodwork was typical of the period and included one-piece molded trim with bull's-eyes and large paneled doors between the parlors. Not far from the house are several early dependencies, including several sheds, a corn crib, and a small barn. One of the buildings served as a small store operated by the Norris family, who have owned the property since the 19th century.

8. Statement of Significance

The Norris House, which dates to circa 1840, has been completely demolished since it was first recorded. No physical evidence remains to mark its location.

The house was described in a previous survey as:

Long in a state of advancing deterioration and recently burned, this typical Federal house was of frame construction, two stories in height, and had a hall and double parlor floor plan. At the east end stood two exterior chimneys. Later additions were built at both ends. The interior woodwork was typical of the period and included one-piece molded trim with bull's-eyes and large paneled doors between the parlors. Not far from the house are several early dependencies, including several sheds, a corn crib, and a small barn. One of the buildings served as a small store operated by the Norris family, who have owned the property since the 19th century.

No evidence of the mentioned outbuildings remains, however, there are a number of 20th century barns on the property today.
