Property Name: La Plata Historic District
Survey No.: CH-326

Property Address	La Plata Historic District
Owner Name/Address	Charles Street, Washington Avenue, Kent Avenue, Oak Avenue, La Plata, Charles County
Year Built	1873-1949

Description:

The La Plata Historic District was surveyed by P.A.C. Spero & Company in 1998. The La Plata Historic District boundaries determined at the time were bounded on the west by the properties on the west side of Washington Avenue, on the north by the intersection of Washington Avenue with Winjon Road and the properties on the north side of Cecil Road. On the east, the district is bounded by the properties on the east side of Kent Avenue, and on the south by an irregular line that runs along Charles Street to St. Mary's Avenue, behind the properties on the south side of Charles Street to the properties on Maple Avenue, and to the intersection of Carroll Street with Maple Avenue and Worcester Street with Oak Avenue. Included within this boundary are 200-600 Charles Street, 10-809 Washington Avenue, Baltimore Street, Talbot Street, Caroline Street, 300-405 Prospect Street, 302-309 Spruce Street, 302 and 304 Cecil Street, 100-206 E. Hawthorne Drive, 102-506 Kent Avenue, 2-109 Oak Avenue, 3-15 Maple Avenue, Graves Avenue, and 605 Wicomico Street. These boundaries include 125 contributing buildings which date from 1847 to 1949, and 29 non-contributing buildings which were built after 1949. The historic district is approximately 74.4 hectares (184 acres) in area.

National Register Evaluation:

The La Plata Historic District boundaries should be extended at the northeastern boundary to include 4, 6, and 8 East Hawthorne Street (CH-547). These properties have been determined to be contributing to the La Plata Historic District. The district boundary should be extended at the southern boundary to include 105 and 107 Maple Avenue (Ch-551). These properties have been determined to be contributing to the La Plata Historic District. The southern boundary should also be extended to include 202 Oak Avenue (CH-553). This property has been determined to be contributing to the La Plata Historic District. The La Plata Historic District boundaries should be extended at the eastern boundary to include 313 Kent Avenue (Ch-550). This property has been determined to be contributing to the La Plata Historic District.

CAPSULE SUMMARY SHEET

Survey No.: CH-326 Construction Date: 1873-1949

Name: La Plata Historic District

Location: Charles Street, Washington Ave., Kent Ave., Oak Ave., La Plata, Charles County

Both/Town/Occupied/Good/Unrestricted

Description:

The La Plata Historic District consists of the historic core of the town of La Plata, which was incorporated in 1888. A commercial district is located in the center of the town, along the Charles Street corridor, with an early- to mid-twentieth century residential corridor to the north centered along Washington Avenue, and a late-nineteenth to early-twentieth century residential corridor to the south along S. Oak and S. Maple Avenues. A railroad corridor runs through the eastern section of the district, from north to south. There are small industries located along Kent Avenue, next to the railroad.

Significance:

The Town of La Plata was started as a stop along the Pope's Creek Branch of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in 1873. In that year, a railroad station was built where the Port Tobacco-Bryantown Road (Charles Street) crossed the railroad tracks. The railroad crossed the lands of several large family holdings, including the Chapmans' "La Plata Farm" and the Matthews' "The Hermitage". Soon, a store and a post office were built along the road close to the station, and the town began to develop. By 1878 there was a population of 35. That number had grown to 120 by 1887, when there were several general merchandisers, a grist and saw mill, a hotel, and a millinery and dressmakers' shop. The county seat was moved from Port Tobacco to La Plata in 1896, and the town continued to prosper. Growth followed the main transportation corridors, occurring first along the railroad tracks and Charles Street and later spreading to the north and south. The current town has a commercial corridor with mixed late-nineteenth and twentieth-century commercial buildings concentrated between the Christ Episcopal Church on the west and Oak Avenue on the east. The town also has several distinct periods and areas of residential development. La Plata reflects the development of communities in Charles County from the late-nineteenth century through the mid-twentieth century. La Plata retains elements from many important eras in Charles County history, including the plantation period of development, the advent of railroads, the reorganization of government, and increased prosperity brought about by the completion of U.S. 301 across the Potomac. The town became the most important town that grew along the new rail line in Charles County. Built on land donated or sold from the two large ante-bellum plantations in the area, The Hermitage and La Plata, the railroad soon brought businesses and residents to La Plata. The town became the county seat in 1896 and a courthouse was built on the main street running east-west through town. There are examples of Late Federal, Colonial Revival, and vernacular Queen Anne-style buildings. The buildings along the railroad tracks epitomize the types of architecture constructed in late-nineteenth century railroad towns, while the building types along Washington Avenue and St. Mary's Avenue illustrate the development of architectural styles in the beginning of the twentieth century.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The La Plata Historic District consists of the historic core of the town of La Plata, which was incorporated in 1888. A commercial district is located in the center of the town, along the Charles Street corridor, with an early- to mid-twentieth century residential corridor to the north centered along Washington Avenue, and a late-nineteenth to early-twentieth century residential corridor to the south along S. Oak and S. Maple Avenues. A railroad corridor runs through the eastern section of the district, from north to south.

Commercial and residential buildings were constructed along Charles Street as the town began to develop. Other early residential buildings were constructed south of Charles Street along Oak and Maple Avenues, on either side of the railroad tracks. These buildings consist of a variety of 2-story, wood-frame houses with Victorian-era detailing, including towers, carved brackets, turned posts, and decorative vergeboards. Other late-nineteenth century buildings are located north of Charles Street on Kent Avenue near its intersection with the railroad. The buildings are on large lots, with a consistent setback. Intermixed with 2-story, wood-frame residences and a church are industrial properties which developed along the railroad tracks, including the La Plata Mill at 213 Kent Avenue, the Southern Maryland Oil Company, and the Indian Head Iron Works, both on Baltimore Avenue. There is also a collection of small industrial buildings, mostly 1-story tall and constructed of concrete block.

The buildings located on either side of Charles Street are a combination of converted late-nineteenth century residences, modern commercial buildings, and late-nineteenth century commercial and governmental buildings. Several prominent buildings lend continuity to the streetscape, including the Carrico Building (CH-344), the Courthouse, which has been encased in a modern Georgian shell, the Old Brick Jail (CH-178), and Christ Episcopal Church (CH-62). The streetscape consists of buildings with similar massing and setback. Though some of the modern buildings are of a larger scale than the older commercial buildings, most of the buildings are of the same height.

The commercial section of Charles Street has undergone the most extensive changes throughout the history of La Plata. Buildings from the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century are intermixed with modern commercial, public, and municipal structures. The general feel of the town, though, remains that of a small community which got its start in the late-nineteenth century as a railroad stop. The railroad tracks continue to define the eastern edge of the historic town, though modern structures such as a hospital and a new county complex have developed farther east.

The area north of Charles Street on Washington Avenue began to develop around the turn of the century. The courthouse was constructed in 1896. Washington Avenue was originally the farm lane leading to The Hermitage (CH-47). The Matthews family, who owned the Hermitage, began to sell lots along the lane in the first years of the twentieth century. Rather sparse at first, the 1½ to 2-story vernacular wood-frame houses with Victorian-era trim, such as Chillum (CH-354), soon were joined by pattern-book type houses, Colonial Revival-influenced homes, and Bungalows. Small streets developed off of Washington Avenue in the 1930s and 1940s, including Prospect Street, Spruce Street, and Cecil Street. Small 1½-story brick and wood-frame cottages and larger Colonial Revival houses continued to be built along these streets. Hawthorne Drive between Washington Avenue and the Robert Crain Highway (U.S. 301), was also developed by early- to mid-twentieth century housing types, including bungalows and Colonial Revival houses. Additional streets and houses were developed in the 1950s.

The buildings and layout of La Plata reflect the development of the town from a railroad stop to a thriving county seat. Laid out along several main roads and the railroad line, the town contains elements which reflect different aspects of its history: late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century commercial buildings, small industrial buildings along the railroad tracks, a collection of late-nineteenth century government buildings which have been altered in the twentieth century, and a variety of homes which show the changing tastes and styles from the late-nineteenth century through the mid-twentieth century.

The historic district is centered along Charles Street, with Maple Street and South Oak Avenue extending south from Charles Street, and Washington Avenue and Kent Avenue extending north from Charles Street. There are several smaller east-west streets which extend from Washington Avenue, including Baltimore Street, Caroline Street, Prospect Street, Spruce Street, Cecil Street, and Hawthorne Road. For location of contributing and non-contributing resources, see map on page 7. 3.

Charles Street: The historic district runs from the 200 block of Charles Street to the 600 block, encompassing both sides of the road. Contributing resources along Charles Street include the Christ Episcopal Church and Rectory (CH-62), the Courthouse, the Old Brick Jail (CH-178), the Carrico Building (CH-344), the La Plata Railroad Station (CH-351), and approximately thirty late-nineteenth to early-twentieth century commercial buildings. Non-contributing buildings include the modern jail northwest of Courthouse, 304 Charles Street, 315 Charles Street, the building at the southeast corner of Charles Street and Washington Avenue, 400 Charles Street, the building at the southwest corner of Charles Street and N. Oak Avenue, 500 Charles Street, and 511-515 Charles Street. See photographs 1 through 17.

Maple Street: Maple Street extends from the south side of Charles Street at the eastern end of the historic district. There is one non-contributing building on the west side of Maple Street, which is unnumbered. There are seven contributing building on Maple Street, consisting of 1 to 2-story frame vernacular houses. See photographs 18 through 22.

Oak Avenue: The historic district includes Oak Street up through the 100 block. There are three non-contributing resources on Oak Avenue, unnumbered buildings located on the east side of the street. There are fourteen contributing resources, consisting of 2 to 2 ½ -story frame and brick houses with Victorian-era trim. See photographs 23 through 32.

Wicomico Avenue: 605 Wicomico Avenue, a 2-story frame house with Victorian-era trim, is included in the historic district. It is a contributing resource. See photograph 33.

Washington Avenue: The historic district includes all of Washington Avenue up through the 800 block. There are six non-contributing resources on Washington Avenue; 10 Washington Avenue, 214 A & B Washington Avenue, 304 Washington Avenue, 507 Washington Avenue, and 805 Washington Avenue. There are thirty-one contributing resources, consisting of residences from the mid-nineteenth century through the mid-twentieth century. See photographs 34 through 58.

Baltimore Street: Baltimore Street extends from the east side of Washington Avenue. There are two non-contributing resources on Baltimore Street, 404 Baltimore Street and a concrete Block building, and the contributing Southern Maryland Oil Company and Indian Head iron Works. See photographs 59 and 60.

Caroline Street: There is one non-contributing resource on Caroline Street. Located at 310, it is a modern apartment complex.

Prospect Street: Prospect Street extends from the east side of Washington Avenue. There are ten contributing resources on Prospect Street, consisting of 1½-story frame houses from the 1930s and 1940s. See photographs 61 through 66.

Spruce Street: Spruce Street extends from the east side of Washington Avenue. 310 Spruce Street is a non-contributing resource, and there are four contributing resources. The contributing resources are 2-story brick Colonial Revival houses. See photographs 67 through 69.

Cecil Street: Cecil Street extends from the east side of Washington Avenue. 303 Cecil Street is a non-contributing resource, and there two contributing circa 1930s houses on Cecil Street. See photographs 70 and 71.

Hawthorne Road: Hawthorne Road extends from the west side of Washington Avenue. There are ten contributing houses on Hawthorne Road, all dating from the 1920s and 1930s. See photographs 72 through 79.

Kent Avenue: Kent Avenue forms the eastern edge of the historic district. It extends north from Charles Street. There are four non-contributing resources on Kent Avenue, including 307 A & B Kent Avenue, 201 Kent Avenue, and 205 Kent Avenue. There are ten contributing resources on Kent Avenue, including a mill/lumber company, a church, two commercial properties and six homes. See photographs 80 through 92.

The contributing buildings within the historic district share a common association with the growth and development of La Plata. There are several important buildings in town which help to define the historic periods of La Plata. The earliest is The Hermitage (CH-47), which was built in 1847 as the home for Major George Matthews. Pieces of the original 508-acre parcel were sold off through the years, reducing the parcel to about 22 acres, but expanding the town of La Plata. The Hermitage retains enough of its historic setting to suggest the landscape which existed before the creation of La Plata. Another important building in the town is the La Plata Railroad Station (CH-351). Built in 1873, this was the first building in what would eventually be the town of La Plata. It remains an important landmark next to the railroad tracks. The Courthouse, Old Jail (CH-178), and the Christ Episcopal Church (CH-62) represent the development of the town as the county seat, and the figurative passing of the torch from Port Tobacco to La Plata as the center of Charles County. Chillum (CH-354) represents the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century residences built in La Plata. The Carrico Building (CH-344) represents the early hotels of La Plata. The Farrel Store at 406 Charles Street and the Bowling Store at 313 Charles Street, though both altered with modern facades, represent the early commercial buildings of the town.

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

The Town of La Plata was started as a stop along the Pope's Creek Branch of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in 1873. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad was chartered in 1853, construction began on the line in 1868, and the first trains ran on January 1, 1873. In that year, a railroad station was built where the Port Tobacco-Bryantown Road (Charles Street) crossed the railroad tracks. The opening of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad in 1873 revitalized the practice of agriculture in southern Maryland. By the mid-nineteenth century, southern Maryland farmers were sensing the need for a safe, fast and dependable way to transport their products to Baltimore, Washington and ports on the Potomac River. Since the opening of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad in 1830, southern Maryland had been losing business to the large and productive farms of the mid-west. At that time, southern Maryland farmers still shipped their products to Baltimore and Washington on steamboats from ports on the Potomac River. A poor internal road system limited access to ports for farms located more than five miles from the river. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, which traveled north-south through the centers of Prince George's and Charles Counties, made inland farms accessible and thus increased their value. Beginning in 1873, the Railroad operated a freight train to Baltimore once a week to carry local produce. Farmers were charged sixteen cents per one-hundred pounds of produce. At its peak, the Railroad transported an average of 150 hogsheads of tobacco per day. City newspapers, including the Baltimore Sun, reported in the 1880s that land values in Charles County were rising rapidly in response to increased profits in agriculture. By 1883, a new canning plant owned by A. T. Whiting Company was operating in Rock Point (Charles County). By the early-twentieth century, the Railroad was carrying modern farm equipment, including reapers, threshers, balers and steam tractors, from Baltimore to southern Maryland. Businesses in southern Maryland which dealt with farm, construction and automotive equipment depended entirely on the Railroad for their livelihood. A growing number of dairy farmers also relied on the Railroad to carry fresh milk to Washington, D.C. The Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, therefore, was responsible for agricultural prosperity in southern Maryland during the nineteenth and twentieth centuries (Baltimore and Potomac 1986, 1-24 passim).

The railroad crossed the lands of several large family holdings, including the Chapmans' "La Plata Farm" and the Matthews' "The Hermitage". Soon a store and a post office were built along the road close to the station, and the town began to develop. By 1878 there was a population of 35. That number had grown to 120 by 1887, when there were several general merchandisers, a grist and saw mill, a hotel, and a millinery and dressmakers' shop (Bland 1887, 249.) The county seat was moved from Port Tobacco to La Plata in 1896, and the town continued to prosper. Growth followed the main transportation corridors, occurring first along the railroad tracks and Charles Street, later spreading to the north and south. The current town has a commercial corridor of mixed late-nineteenth and twentieth-century commercial buildings concentrated between the Christ Episcopal Church on the west and Oak Avenue on the east. The town also has several distinct periods and areas of residential development.

The area that was to become the town of La Plata was situated close to the intersection of several important early roads, including the Port Tobacco-Bryantown Road (later Main Street, then Charles Street), the Old Piscataway Road (later Kent Avenue), and a colonial-era trail (later Hawthorne Drive, MD 225). The majority of the land in the area was held by the Chapman and Matthews families. It was from these families and several others that a right-of-way for the railroad was purchased (Rivoire 1997, Section 8 Page 10). Until the construction of the railroad and the La Plata station, the area was not likely to be developed as a town despite its proximity to several crossroads. The land was privately held, and its close proximity to the then county seat of Port Tobacco provided no impetus for the owners to sell profitable agricultural land. But Port Tobacco was already in decline, due in large part to the loss of shoreline on the Port Tobacco River because of silting. The bypassing of the town by the railroad accelerated Port Tobacco's decline. A fire which destroyed the courthouse in 1892 completed the process (Goldsmith 1987, 4).

The construction of the railroad encouraged growth around the La Plata station. The area soon became a commercial center, and people began to build homes there (Brown 1976, 65-66). The Chapmans donated 1-square mile of land for the site of the town's construction and for the town roads. As early as 1873 the Matthews family began to sell lots from the Hermitage land bordering the Port Tobacco and Piscataway Roads. In 1888, there were approximately 120 residents, and the town was incorporated (Bland 1887, 249). The first residential development occurred around the railroad tracks, on Oak Avenue and Railroad (Maple) Avenue. These homes were mostly 2-story wood-frame buildings, built in traditional vernacular forms, such as the I-house and front-gable houses. They featured the decorative trim associated with buildings from the Victorian-era. Buildings were also constructed on Kent Avenue, including the La Plata United Methodist Church, built in 1890, and the pre-existing church parsonage, built circa 1880 (Goldsmith 1987, 5). In 1894, the state legislature voted to move the county seat from Port Tobacco. A competition was held between the towns of Chapel Point and La Plata. La Plata won the bid, and county offices were located in the new La Plata Town Hall until the courthouse was built. The new courthouse was dedicated in 1896. A jail was built the following year, and La Plata was firmly established as the new county seat (Wearmouth 1988, 9).

At the turn of the century La Plata was a prosperous town with new government buildings, multiple businesses, and fine houses along the railroad. In the first several decades of the twentieth century, a new residential area began to develop north of Charles Street. The lane next to the courthouse led from Charles Street to "The Hermitage," the Matthews family farm. Beginning around 1905, the Matthews began to sell lots along this lane. A house was built in 1905 for Mr. and Mrs. William Howard. Adrian Posey, a prominent La Plata businessman and publisher of the The Maryland Independent newspaper, built a row of five 2-story, wood-frame houses on the east side of Washington Avenue, directly behind his bank building (Wearmouth 1988, 24-25). Other families, including the Clarks and the Cochranes, built large wood-frame homes along the street. The prominent "Chillum" (CH-354) was built by the Digges family in 1915. More houses were built in the 1920s, and side streets were developed in the 1930s and 1940s.

In 1904, the Christ Episcopal Church was moved to La Plata from Port Tobacco. The church was taken apart, moved stone by stone and rebuilt on a site in La Plata that duplicated its original location next to the courthouse in Port Tobacco. The interior was destroyed by fire in 1906, but the church was soon restored. A gothic bell tower was added to the church at that time (Klaphor and Brown 1995, 143).

Ground was broken in 1922 for a new concrete highway which would later become the Robert Crain Highway. Located west of La Plata, the highway provided easy access to Baltimore (Brown 1976, 44). After the Governor Harry W. Nice Bridge was built over the Potomac River in 1940, the Crain Highway (U.S. 301) became the principal New York-to-Florida road for commercial and pleasure transport (Klaphor and Brown 1995, 147). The increased opportunities for business brought about by this new transportation corridor contributed to La Plata's growth throughout the 1920s and 1930s.

By 1926, the population had risen to 500. The town had grown to the approximate configuration represented by the historic district boundary. The town had several well-established enterprises, including the La Plata Mill and Supply Company, an oil company, a bottling works, and smaller businesses such as a movie theatre, stores, banks, and hotels (Wearmouth 1988, 37). In 1926, a tornado destroyed the Chapman farm, "La Plata," and the elementary school. The tornado killed fifteen people. After the tornado, the school was relocated to a parcel behind the Christ Episcopal Church.

8. Significance (Continued)

As a result of this disaster, Charles County's first fire department was established in 1929. The Fire Department was built on Charles Street across from the Episcopal Church. The fire department remains at that location, though the 1929 building has been replaced with a modern facility (Goldsmith 1987, 9).

La Plata was home to several prominent national politicians, including Congressmen Sydney E. Mudd, Sr. and Sydney E. Mudd, Jr. Both were strong proponents of the Republican Party and were active in the House Naval Affairs Committee. They supported the Naval Proving Ground at Indian Head in Charles County. Other local politicians included Congressman Andrew Grantt Chapman, who later was appointed Collector of Internal Revenue for the District of Maryland (Wearmouth Charles County 1986, passim).

The railroad continued to play an important role in the life of the community, as both a freight and passenger line. Farm equipment and automobiles were shipped by rail, as was coal, oil and tobacco. Passengers had easy access to Washington, D.C. and all destinations on the east coast. Passenger service ended in 1949.

National Register Evaluation:

The La Plata Historic District is eligible for the National Register under Criteria A and C, as a late-nineteenth century town which developed as a result of the placement of a station of the Pope's Creek Branch of the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad and as a result of the movement of the county seat to La Plata in 1896. The La Plata Historic District is eligible under Criterion A, as it reflects the development of communities in Charles County from the late-nineteenth century through the mid-twentieth century. La Plata retains elements from many important eras in Charles County history, including the plantation period of development, the advent of railroads, the reorganization of government, and increased prosperity brought about by the completion of U.S. 301 across the Potomac. La Plata became the most important town that grew along the new rail line in Charles County. Built on land donated or sold from the two large ante-bellum plantations in the area, The Hermitage and La Plata, the railroad soon brought businesses and residents to La Plata. The town became the county seat in 1896 and a courthouse was built on the main street running east-west through town. The La Plata Historic District is also eligible under Criterion C for its examples of Late Federal, Colonial Revival, and vernacular Queen Anne-style buildings. The buildings along the railroad tracks epitomize the types of architecture constructed in late-nineteenth century railroad towns, while the building types along Washington Avenue and St. Mary's Avenue illustrate the development of architectural styles in the beginning of the twentieth century. Historic research indicates that the property has no association with persons who have made specific contributions to history, and therefore, it does not meet Criterion B.

Verbal Boundary Description and Justification:

The La Plata Historic District is generally bounded on the west by the rear property lines of the properties on the west side of Washington Avenue, on the north by the intersection of Washington Avenue with Winjon Road and the rear property lines on the north side of Cecil Road. On the east, the district is bounded by the rear property lines on the east side of Kent Avenue, and on the south by an irregular line that runs along Charles Street to St. Mary's Avenue, behind the properties on the south side of Charles Street to the properties on Maple Avenue, and to the intersection of Carroll Street with Maple Avenue and Worcester Street with Oak Avenue. Included within this boundary are 200-600 Charles Street, 10-809 Washington Avenue, Baltimore Street, Talbot Street, Caroline Street, 300-405 Prospect Street, 302-309 Spruce Street, 302 and 304 Cecil Street, 100-206 E. Hawthorne Drive, 102-506 Kent Avenue, 2-109 Oak Avenue, 3-15 Maple Avenue, Graves Avenue, and 605 Wicomico Street. These boundaries include 125 contributing buildings which date from 1847 to 1949, and 29 non-contributing buildings which were built after 1949. The historic district is approximately 74.4 hectares (184 acres) in area.

Description of Property and Eligibility Determination: (Use continuation sheet if necessary and attach map and photo)

The building located at 403 Charles Street is considered not eligible for the National Register of Historic Places, as well as a non-contributing resource to the LaPlata Historic District.

Constructed approximately in 1960 and anchoring the Ben Franklin store, this building was constructed after the period of significance for the LaPlata Historic District.

The building is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A for its association with the Town of LaPlata's growth and development as the County Seat for Charles County due to its age of construction which is after the defined period of significance.

The building is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion B as research did not indicate that it is associated with persons significant to the local history.

The building is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C as it is not an outstanding example of an architectural style or type.

The building is not being evaluated for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion D.

For these reasons above, the resource is also considered a non-contributing resource to the LaPlata Historic district.

The property at 415 Charles Street is considered a contributing resource to the LaPlata Historic District, as it retains enough integrity to illustrate its age as a building that was constructed during the period of significance to the LaPlata Historic District.

While the property has sustained damage from the tornado that struck LaPlata in the spring of 2002, an exact date of construction is difficult to pinpoint. However, the single story commercial building is constructed of brick and appears to have a parapet roof. The roof is currently covered with a tarp. The front façade has a recessed centered front door and flanking bay windows. The bay windows are also currently under repair. Along the west elevation of the building, there is evidence of a former window openings between brick pilasters that have now been enclosed. Based on the visible architectural details, in all likelihood, this property was constructed prior to 1950 and is therefore considered contributing to the significance of the LaPlata.

The property at 415 Charles Street is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A as it alone does not fully illustrate its association with the growth and development of the Town of LaPlata as the Charles County Seat.

Located at 417 Charles Street is the Casey Jones Restaurant and is a non-contributing resource to the LaPlata Historic District.

The building that houses the Casey Jones restaurant was constructed in the early 1980s. This building is set back further on the lot to accommodate for parking in the front. The one story building is shaded by a large overhanging roof that creates an outdoor seating area.

The building is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A for its association with the Town of LaPlata's growth and development as the County Seat for Charles County due to its age of construction which is after the defined period of significance.

The building is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion B as research did not indicate that it is associated with persons significant to the local history.

The building is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion C as it is not an outstanding example of an architectural style or type.

The Steffans Building located at the corner of Charles Street and LaGrange Street is considered a contributing resource to the LaPlata Historic District, as it retains enough architectural integrity to illustrate its age as a building that was constructed during the period of significance to the LaPlata Historic District.

The circa 1910 American four-square building has the character defining hipped roof. There has been some modifications to the building as the north and east walls are longer than the hipped roof line, suggesting some sort of addition at a later date. Additionally, the window and door spacing would also suggest modifications. Elements that do retain the integrity, or that illustrate an older style include the brackets under the eaves and the original 6/6 double hung sash windows.

The Steffans Building is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion A as it alone does not fully illustrate its association with the growth and development of the Town of LaPlata as the Charles County Seat.

The Steffans Building is not considered eligible for the National Register of Historic Places under Criterion B as research did not indicate that it is associated with persons significant to the local history.

SOUTHERN MARYLAND OIL CO.

A black and white photograph of a single-story, dark-colored building. The words "SOUTHERN MARYLAND OIL CO." are printed in large, light-colored, sans-serif capital letters across the upper portion of the building's facade. Below the text, there are several windows of varying sizes. In front of the building, two light-colored cars are parked. The car on the left is a station wagon, and the car on the right is a sedan. To the right of the main building, a portion of a lighter-colored building is visible. The sky is bright and overcast, with several power lines stretching across the upper half of the frame. The overall lighting is high-contrast, with deep shadows and bright highlights.
