

House at Crab Landing
CH-734
Mt. Victoria
Private

Circa 1875

Erected around 1875, the House at Crab Landing is a good example of Charles County's domestic vernacular architecture of the late 19th century. The two-part, single-pile side gable dwelling is located directly on the shoreline at the confluence of Dolly Boarman Creek and the Wicomico River. The main block measures approximately 16' x 14' and includes a single first and second story room. Measuring 10'x12', the 1 ½ story dependency attached to the west wall has a fully plastered attic loft reached by a simple stationary step ladder. A detached summer kitchen and a ruinous privy stand nearby.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

Erected around 1872, the House at Crab Landing is a good example of Charles County's vernacular architecture of the late 19th century. The dwelling is located directly on the shoreline at the confluence of Dolly Boarman Creek and the Wicomico River. The house, along with a c. 1920 one-story detached kitchen and a ruinous privy, is approached by a long narrow lane connecting Swindler Road to the waterfront. The narrow lane winds through agricultural fields before entering a wooded area that follow the shoreline of Dolly Boarman Creek before reaching the peninsula. This inlet forms a protected natural harbor and mooring place still used today. The remains of a ruinous outhouse stands to the north.

Facing south, The two-part dwelling consists of a full two story main block to the east attached to a one and one half story dependency to the west. Both are one room deep. The wood frame is covered in weatherboard siding and rests on brick piers. A single interior brick chimney pierces the metal roof. The cornice is boxed. A collapsed porch once extended across the front elevation.

The front elevation includes a single centered window on the first and second story and a principal entrance near the east wall, while the rear elevation has similar windows and no door. The east wall has a single window that provides light to the stair and the second story. The dependency has a single doorway on the south wall, a single window on the north wall and single first and second story windows on the gabled west wall. All trim is similar square-edged molding. Shutters are constructed of vertical tongue and groove matchstick plank.

The interior is completely plastered with a horsehair binding. A board and batten enclosed stair passage is located on the east wall which leads to the second floor. The attached dependency has a unique ladder stair that provides access to a finished second story loft above. Directly to the west of the house site is a one story cabin with an exterior brick chimney. The cabin likely postdates the dwelling, using wire nails in its construction. The building has a metal roof with exposed rafters and stands on wood piers.

National Register Maryland Register not evaluated

Prepare a one-paragraph summary statement of significance addressing applicable criteria, followed by a narrative discussion of the history of the resource and its context. (For compliance reports, complete evaluation on a DOE Form - see manual.)

Crab Landing is significant as a well-preserved example of vernacular architecture in Charles County. Although further research is necessary, the site may have additional significance for its association with the underdocumented maritime culture and seafood industry in Charles County. Originally associated with Wicomico Fields to the north, in 1872, the large estate was subdivided and Crab Landing Farm, identified also as Lot No. 4, was conveyed to Francis James Maddox from George F. and Mary E. Maddox. In 1924, Francis James Maddox now a widower, sold the farm to Emma E. Walker.
