DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (if known) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE
Brinkhorn Farmhouse is an eight bay long brick structure which had an interesting and perhaps unique development over its life. The southern half of the structure is five bays long, two stories tall and has an entrance in the center bay. Like the two story frame house at Cabin Creek, however, three of the bays are spaced closely together, while the other two are wider apart, indicating the probability that it was developed in two stages. The north half of the structure is also the same height, though the windows are slightly lower. This section also appears to have grown, for the two bays closest the first part have a door between them and a line in the wall suggesting the second story was originally lower than now. The last bay also has such a line even lower in the wall. In all likelihood, the house had a telescopic form at one time during its life. It would be difficult to tell, however, since it has been covered with stucco. On the south gable is a modern porch, as there is in front of the door. Most of the sash appear original and have 12/8 pane on both stories. There are three chimneys equally placed in the building, although the north chimney is built partly on the outside of the gable.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The building is one of the few structures north of East New Market to be constructed of brick. It also is important because of its curious development. The building is worth of farther study.

On the property are also an early corn crib and barn.
